PREFACE

THE tabulation of the names of clergy ordained or appointed to benefices was undertaken with the object of meeting the frequent inquiries of genealogists or of those interested in the history of parishes, but it is felt that the bare publication of names would prove uninteresting reading unless accompanied by an introduction giving an outline of conclusions suggested by such lists, supplemented by facts gathered from other sources.

The time is ripe, it is submitted, for fuller research into and for a restatement of the history of the Church in Wales during the seventeenth and the eighteenth centuries.¹

The twentieth century, as it lengthens out, is bringing a broader and more sympathetic outlook to such study. The present-day student, as compared with his predecessor, is less complacent, and his attitude is more critical as he surveys the religious movement which flowed over Wales more than a century ago.

The publication of important books such as the Calendar of Wynn Papers, Menevia Sacra, The Morris Letters, biographical articles and papers on local history are providing the material on which to work.²

¹A beginning has been made by the late Reverend Thomas Shankland and Dr. Thomas Richards, successive librarians of the University College of North Wales, Bangor. An excellent handbook has recently appeared, Hanes Cymru yn y Ddeunawfed Ganrif, by R. T. Jenkins, but my Introduction was completed before my attention was drawn to it.

²The Calendars of State Papers, Calendars of Patent Rolls, etc. deal largely with earlier centuries, though still valuable for the seventeenth century.

Unfortunately, no visitation queries, as issued by the bishops, and the replies thereto in connection with the parishes are available until the year 1749, but much use is made of those dated that year in the following Introduction. As will be explained, the Records of the Consistory Court of the Diocese provide very little information, but possibly a careful scrutiny of the parochial registers might occasionally furnish useful details. The Terriers filed in the Registry, giving a list of the properties of the church in the parishes, including the furniture and books of the church, begin, with few exceptions, in the year 1785. Some difficulty has been experienced in compiling the lists, as the registers are not complete and cover part only of the period dealt with, but with the help of the subscription books, that is, the books in which the newly ordained or those appointed to office subscribed their names to the necessary oaths and declarations, the gaps in the Rolls of Registers have, it is hoped, been made good. Information as to the University degrees, if any, and the patrons, is frequently missing in the subscription books, and the names of the chapelries attached to parishes are omitted for some years in the originals.

The place-names are spelt differently from page to page in the records, and every endeavour has been made to follow such variation of spelling, but in the pages covering the nineteenth century and in the Index the modern form of spelling has been followed.

As a rule, the bishop was the patron, and a note has been made where the patronage was in the presentation of others, but, occasionally, the records are silent on the point. The benefices are entered as vicarage or perpetual curacies when so described in the records. Otherwise they are rectories.

There are included, it should be noted, under the heading of "Benefice," the licences to assistant curates¹ up to the year 1825, and also the licences issued to schoolmasters.

In the latter part of the nineteenth century, books of reference dealing with the clergy become available, including the first Diocesan Directory of the Diocese of Bangor, published in the year 1866.

¹Licences to assistant curates are rarely entered in the existing records until the year 1722.

INTRODUCTION

IN the Introduction to my previous book on the History of the Diocese¹ certain suggestions bearing on the religious movements of the sixteenth century, so far as they touched the Diocese of Bangor, were put forward for the consideration of students. The claim was made that the Church had won through the upheavals of the period with a considerable measure of success, the records of the Diocese seeming to support this contention. The Introduction touched also on the early years of the following century, the records being again cited as evidence that the Church in the diocese was making progress.

The need of exercising reserve in deducing conclusions either favourable or unfavourable to the Church of the period from such scanty records as are available, must be obvious to the dispassionate student. Three centuries, moreover, have passed and the age in question presented material conditions and advantages of so limited a character as compared with those enjoyed in the twentieth century², that judgment should be tempered by a judicial consideration of all the circumstances of the times.

²*Calendar of Wynn Papers*, where the difficulty of communication in Caernarvonshire in the year 1595 is referred to. The county is there described as "the most rugged impassable barren county in Wales." Sir John Wynn, writing in the month of October, 1616, says that "at this season the ways are deep and impassable." See an article in Y Cymrodor, vol. 38, p. 42; where it is pointed out that there were bridle-paths only and one road only in Merionethshire until the end of the 18th century. See also Hanes Môn yn y Bedwaredd Ganrif ar Byntbeg, p. 15.

The records afford sufficient evidence that the clergy on the whole were fairly well educated. A large proportion of the ordinands had been educated at Oxford or Cambridge.¹ This occurred mainly during the episcopate of Bishop Henry Rowlands (1598-1616), but even after his death the record is creditable, and during the episcopate of Bishop Edmund Griffith the ordinands who were graduates of or connected with Oxford or Cambridge number 17 out of 27 ordained.

In addition, perusal of the lists of appointments to benefices² also shows that a large majority of those admitted to office were the possessors of University degrees.

The names of the incumbents and of the Cathedral Clergy are very largely Welsh, though English names occasionally appear, several of these latter bearing the names of families who are known to have been settled in the district. The difficulty can readily be understood of judging the ability and character of the clergy at a distance of three hundred years, but a fair number were at work in the diocese between the years 1600 to 1646 whose learning and achievements are still borne in remembrance, and have left a mark on the road along which they travelled. In the early years Richard Parry, who, afterwards as Bishop of St. Asaph, earned lasting fame as the author of the revised version of the Welsh

Bible, was Dean of Bangor Cathedral¹; Edmund Prys, the famous author of the Welsh metrical version of the Psalms, was beneficed in the Diocese and was Archdeacon of Merioneth¹; John Williams,¹ Dean of Bangor, 1604–1613, had been Principal of Jesus College, Oxford, Margaret Professor of Divinity, and was the editor of a work by Roger Bacon. Among the clergy were Dr. Michael Roberts, Vicar of Llanbadrig, afterwards Principal of Jesus College, Oxford, corrector for the press of the Welsh Bible of 1630², also Henry Parry, Rector of Rhoscolyn, the author of a learned Welsh Grammar, Hugh Lewis, Rector of Llanddeiniolen, who is reputed to be the Hugh Lewis known as one of the first scholars of the age, and Theodore Price, Rector of Llanfair Harlech, who became Principal of Hart Hall, Oxford; William Price, Rector of Dolgelley, was White Professor of Moral Philosophy at Oxford; William Lloyd, at a later period the nonjuring Bishop of Norwich, was Rector of Efenechtyd in the diocese in the year 1643³. Fame of a more widespread character was won by Bishop Lewis Bayly⁴, whose work, The Practice of Piety directing a Christian man how to walk that he may please God, passed through many editions and was translated into several languages, and is said to have profoundly ⁴The Bishop, at one period of his life, was imprisoned by the High Commission, but apparently was acquitted, and is entitled to receive the benefit of such acquittal in any estimate of his character. Vide Calendar of Wynn Papers, 1515–1696; also Calendar of State Papers, Dom. 1611–1618, pp. 156, 162; 1619–1623, p. 276; 1625–1626, p. 312.

A paper was recently read on the life of the Bishop at a meeting of the Cymrodorion Society. This will shortly be published by the Society, but, unfortunately, I have not had the advantage of hearing or of reading the paper.—A.I.P.

influenced John Bunyan. The bishops in the early part of the century were, so far as is known, men of capacity and high character, though doubtless not free from the shortcomings of their times. More particularly, gratitude requires mention of Henry Rowlands, Bishop of Bangor, the founder of Bottwnog Grammar School, of scholarships at Oxford, and of an almshouse at Bangor.¹

Historians of the period seem to estimate the standard of piety and learning among the clergy whether in the high offices of the Church, in the Universities, or in London parishes, as exceptionally high, while picturing the ordinary country clergy on the contrary as distinctly inferior in social status and in education². This reflection on the latter class of clergy would hardly apply, it would seem, to the Diocese of Bangor, a purely country diocese, where the great proportion of clergy with University degrees has already been referred to, while the published pedigrees of Welsh families show a noticeable number of their sons or relations by marriage, as rectors of parishes or holding high offices in the diocese. At this period the following important families, amongst others, contributed to the ranks of the ministry of the diocese :— In Anglesey : Bulkeleys of Baron Hill, Meuricks of Bodorgan, Griffiths of Carreglwyd, Williams of Chwaen and Nantanog ; in Caernarvonshire : Williams of Cochwillan, Glyns of Glynllivon, Griffiths of Cefnamwlch, Mostyns of Gloddaeth.³

There are certain references in recently published works which, in the absence of details regarding the inner life of the Church, may with advantage be mentioned. For instance, the stress laid upon the catechising of children in the Statement of Bishop Lewis Bayly, hereinafter quoted, may be borne in mind, and, further, the same bishop, writing to Sir John Wynn¹, puts forward his wish that a young man fit for a cure should remain in a certain parish, in order to catechise throughout Lent and make the children fit for confirmation². The same volume refers to a newcomer from Oxford sent to replace a curate at Dolwyddelan, "who should keep school in the Parish if the parishioners will have him".

A letter written by Sir John Wynn in the same correspondence mentions the discontent of the parishioners of Beddgelert with their curate on the ground of his non-residence and his neglect to administer the Communion to the Sick. The writer of the letter recommends another man, a Bachelor of Arts, as suitable for the place. This discontent may be quoted as a sign that a certain standard of duty was expected and possibly secured³.

There is also a protest of Bishop Lewis Bayly,⁴ which sheds useful light on the working of the diocese, namely, "The Bishop in reply to accusations of negligence in the

A rubric in the Book of Common Prayer ordered that children should be openly instructed in the Church in some part of the Catechism.

³*Calendar of Wynn Papers*, 1483.

government of his See and especially of having admitted divers persons into the Ministry without subscriptions to the Orders of the Church, vindicates his general care in reference to ordination and subscription, but finds lately that some three or four ministers, who do not reside in the Diocese, by the neglect of his chaplains escaped without subscribing. Protests that hereafter he will keep his book of subscriptions himself. Has expended £600 in repairs of his Cathedral and has planted grave and learned preachers over all his Diocese, three or four preaching ministers for one he found, has taken care that catechising be duly observed, has suffered none to preach but such as are conformable and has preached himself every Sunday until he became impotent. He and his Clergy have provided armour for 100 men ready for the King's service. He takes pains in visiting, confirming and keeping Synods when all his Clergy give him an account of every man's life and doctrine etc".¹

A less favourable view may, it is admitted, be taken of the state of the Church of the period. For instance, the list of appointments as given up to the year 1646, from the beginning of the century, testify to the continued existence of pluralism; Bishop Lewis Bayly may be justly criticised for the rapid promotion of his son, John Bayly, while the action of Griffith Williams, who, with his Bishopric of Ossory in Ireland, continued to hold the Deanery of Bangor, cannot escape censure.

In the year 1623 Bishop Lewis Bayly seems to have held a visitation of the diocese, for a summary of the presentments filed against certain of the clergy has been printed¹. Assuming the authenticity of the document and also the correctness of the charges, it should still be borne in mind that the replies to these presentments or complaints have not been preserved. It may also be claimed that the document in question hardly shows any appreciable degree of faulty organisation, and that it is valuable rather as throwing light on the working of the Church and the customary Church services of the period.

The most general complaint in such summary touches on the failure to hold services on Wednesdays and Fridays, otherwise than in Lent. Two clergy are presented for not relieving the poor, another for not administering the sacrament at marriages, and five for not having perambulations of their parishes. Three² churches are mentioned where sermons had not been preached for a twelvemonth and more, and a larger number where few sermons were preached. In reading these complaints as to lack of sermons,³ it should be remembered that the period was one of transition, between the days when sermons in the modern sense were infrequent, and the days when sermons acquired far greater prominence in the religious activities of the clergy and of their congregations.

The three churches where sermons were lacking are Penmon, Llangwyllog, and Dolwyddelan, parishes that had been appropriated to monasteries in pre-Reformation days, with the result that the endowment had, on the dissolution, been alienated ; apart from this the population of Penmon was probably about one hundred and of Llangwyllog a little over this number, though Dolwyddelan may have had a population nearer 400.¹ It might be argued that, as a matter of organisation, the number of sermons and even of services might under the circumstances described have been curtailed in the places named without reproach to the Church or clergy.

²It is not clear from the Summary whether Llanwnog should not be added.

In four cases complaints were made of the bad condition of the churchyards, while to come at length to the presentments of a serious character, three grave charges of drunkenness and neglect of duty are alleged in the cases of Llanddeusant, Aberdaron, and Llangian. Except in one instance there is no reference to non-residence or to pluralism, though, as already mentioned, this latter evil was prevalent. The diocese, it should be mentioned, contained at the time 193 churches and chapels, so the proportion of churches or clergy alleged to be in default was not excessive.²

¹The population is estimated from the number of families as given in a Visitation Return dated 1749, vide Appendix B, it being assumed that there was no great variation. It should be mentioned that such Return does not include Llangwyllog.

²Reference is made at some length to this document, for the reason that it has been used extensively by writers on the religious history of Wales as proving the wretched condition of the Church in the seventeenth century. Such writers, beginning with Rees in his History of Nonconformity in Wales, 2nd ed., p. 8, followed by Rees and Brynmor Jones in The Welsh People, describe these Presentments as "a Report from an episcopal visitation" made by the Bishop. This is hardly a correct description of Presentments, which are only allegations to be inquired into.

The denunciations of Vicar Prichard are also and not unfairly quoted with frequency in condemnation of the period. It might be urged, though the plea is not pressed, that the vicar, in the spirit of a prophet or revivalist, was subject to fits of depression and pessimism, but it is more pertinent to take into account his strain of Puritanism leading him at times to denounce the life and conduct of his contemporaries,¹ who, at this stage, were largely untouched by that depreciation of the gladness of life which characterised the Puritan.

There is little or no evidence as to the condition of the fabrics of the churches.² Extensive improvements and restorations had marked the early Tudor days, and probably the seventeenth century witnessed little church building. The population was increasing at a slow rate, even if there was an increase, and the existing accommodation was, as a rule, doubtless adequate. Certain transepts ¹Certain writers in recent years have raised doubt as to the authenticity of some of the compositions attributed to the Vicar, more particularly those parts coloured with strong Puritan bias. Scholars have not, however, applied themselves fully to this point. Vide History of the Church in Wales (Ambrose Jones, pp. 111-115); also Landmarks, pp. 113-116.

²Records show that testators made bequests for the repair of churches, for instance, Arthur Williams of Llanbadrig is recorded as leaving small sums for the repair of the Cathedral and of Llanbadrig Church, in the year 1629 (Arch. Camb., 1878, p. 309). Reference is made to a benevolence to be received from the clergy of the diocese for the repair of the Cathedral, anno 1636 (Arch. Camb., 1878, p. 311). The Jesus Chapel in the parish of Llanfair D.C. was founded and endowed in 1619 by Mr. Rice Williams of Eyarth Uchaf, a verger in Westminster Abbey, "for a Curate to read prayers and teach school in." It was consecrated in 1623, History of the Diocese of St. Asaph.

The Western Tower of Holyhead Church was built about 1635.

A curious entry appears in the Calendar of State Papers, Dom., 1636-1637, p. 375, which records a petition to the Archbishop of three citizens of Bangor against a decree of excommunication passed on them for refusing to pay their assessment of monies required for the repair of the Church, for books, ornaments, and other necessities. They argued that such expenses had hitherto been borne by the Bishop and other clergy. The petition was referred to certain judges, to hear and "to make some peaceable end of the business."

or chapels were, as is known, added to the churches either to supply additional space for the parishioners generally or to serve as seating places for the leading family of the parish. The chapels, or transepts as they are now more commonly called, at Llangadwaladr, Llaneugrad, Llanbeulan, Llanfaglan, Caerhun,¹ Llanbedr,¹ and Llanddwywe are probably instances of this. It should be remembered that in parts of the diocese many of the churches were thatched and would quickly fall out of repair.² For the bulk of attendants at church there would be benches, often without backs, some of which still survive. Gradually permission would be obtained for the erection of seats or pews ; for instance,³ there is a record of a licence from the bishop to erect a seat in Dolgelly Church, and in some cases deeds of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries show that a farm would carry with it the right to a particular seat in the parish church.⁴

Returning to the question of the spiritual and intellectual conditions of the Church and its influence on the people, an analogy may, not unfairly, be drawn from the history of the Church in modern times. For instance, when a diocese in the present or in the preceding century has been ruled for a long period of time by capable bishops, with a fairly educated clergy, including a sprinkling of really remarkable men among them, such a diocese would probably possess a vigorous Church life contributing in no small degree to the current forces for good. It may be pleaded that such a result would follow equally in the early part of the seventeenth century, when, as is submitted, such conditions ruled in the Diocese of Bangor. It is, moreover, difficult to conceive that a Bishop such as Henry Rowlands, whose zeal, goodness, and generosity to his Church and country are still held in high regard, could pass an eighteen years' episcopate without influencing in some degree his diocese with his own spirit¹.

There is no necessity to labour this point. The Civil War presented a test of the work and influence of the Church. Adversity serves as a test of human character and of institutions, whether religious, political, or social. Such a touchstone was shortly applied to the Church in the diocese, and the patient endurance then shown by the clergy and Church people, and the negligible impression made by the religious services and ministrations supplied by the Commonwealth Authorities, may, it is submitted, be claimed as the marks of a Church strong in the affection of its flock and of a not ungrateful people.

There is little evidence enabling us to estimate the extent of Laudian influence on the diocese¹.

The Dean, Griffith Williams, was a noted Royalist, and, in addition to a book of devotions, published works in support of the King.² William Roberts, who became Bishop in the year 1637, is reported to have owed his promotion to Laud, and reference may be made to John Owen, Bishop of St. Asaph. He was the son of an Archdeacon of Anglesey and one of the family of Owens of Bodsilin in the diocese. He became chaplain to Charles I, when Prince of Wales, and is said to have gained the favour of Laud. On the other hand, the famous John Williams, Bishop of Lincoln and Lord Keeper, and afterwards Archbishop of York, whose influence would not favour Laudian tendencies, was a ¹LAMBETH MS. 943, fol. 271 (anno 1636). A Return of Archbishop Laud to the King reads as follows: "In Bangor I find that catechizinge was quite out of use in those remote Partes (the more the Pittye) but the Bishop is now in hope to doe much good and sees some Reformation in this Particular already. And I would saye for this and ye other Dioceses in Wales that much more good might be done there in a church waye, if they were not overborne by the Proceedings of ye Court of the Marches there. And this present yeare in this diocese of Bangor my Commissioners for my Metropolitall Visitation there complaine into me that the power which belongs to my Place hath been in them very much wronged and impeached by that Court. And I do most humbly beseech your Majesty in your own good tyme to give this my cause a hearing, if it take not a fare end without great trouble."

Opposite this entry there is a marginal note in the handwriting, as it is generally considered, of King Charles, as follows: "I doubt not, but by the grace of God to agree these differences by my hearing of them."

Another entry in the same MS., fol. 285 (anno 1638), namely "Bangor. In this diocese the Bishop certifies me two considerable things and both of them are of difficult cure. The one concerns his Bishopric where everything is lett for lives by his Predecessors to ye very Mill that grinds his corne. The other concerns the Diocese in general where by reason of ye Poverty of the Place all clergymen of hope of worth seeke Preferment elsewhere. And he tells me plainly some weak Schollers must be ordeyned or else some cures must be left altogether unsupplied."

The following year, namely, 1639, the Archbishop reports to the King that the Bishops of several Dioceses including Bangor "do all certifye that everything is well in their respective Dioceses concerning the Particulars contayned in your Majestys Instructions."

native of the diocese and closely connected with several of the leading families. The influence of Bishop Lewis Bayly was probably adverse to Laud.¹

The difficulty that arose in some districts in connection with the reading of the Book of Sports would scarcely be felt in the diocese except in a limited degree. Tradition seems to be definite that up to the latter part of the eighteenth century the Welsh people were of a gay disposition, with little of the sternness of the Puritan in them, so the Book of Sports would not offend their traditions. The denunciations by Vicar Prichard and others is in itself a measure of the strength of this trait in their character, and there is little doubt that it contributed to the coldness with which the Puritan regime was received, and strengthened the support lavished on the Royalist cause. During the period of the Puritan ascendancy, Taylor, the poet, who made a journey through Wales in the year 1652, mentions "that in many places people do exercise in the Churchyard at the lawful and laudable games of trap cat, stoolball and rackets on Sunday".²

The completeness with which Roman Catholicism had disappeared in the diocese is startling, though there are ¹The Article on his life [supra. p. xiii. Note] will probably touch on this point.

Also Antiquities of Llandegai and Llanllechid, pp. 75, 89. Throughout the ages an innate love among people generally for music and dramas found vent in the mystery plays or some form of drama whether in church or outside the church. As illustrating the widespread prevalence of games, Baldcock, Bishop of London, 1304-1313, prohibited wrestling, dances, or other sports in churches and cemeteries (C. and Y. Society, Baldcock, pp. 73, 145). Also Grandisson, Bishop of Exeter, prohibits sports in a church and an improper play, while Trelick, Bishop of Hereford, prohibits a play (C. and Y. references to occasional members, for instance, Thomas Williams, of Trefriw, a learned Welsh scholar and physician, is generally assumed to be one, as also is Hugh Morris, Clerk, also of Trefriw, so possibly there was a group of them in that neighbourhood.¹

As showing the regard for reverence and for worthy accessories in the conduct of services, mention may be made of gifts of Church plate, distinctive of the period, then made to several churches.

A learned book on the Church plate of the diocese² records twelve chalices of the reign of James I, as still existent in the diocese ; one, namely, a chalice at Beddgelert, is described as being of particularly splendid character, the bowl being delicately engraved by a contemporary artist with a standing figure of Mary the Virgin, Mary Cleophas, and Mary Salome, the Blessed Virgin with a halo surrounding her head and occupying the central position, with an inscription recording the fact of the chalice having been given by Sir John Williams, a native of the parish, in the year 1610, he being goldsmith to the King. The reign of Charles I was marked by several additions to the Church plate of the diocese, more particularly by the gift of a chalice by William Bold, of Llechcynfarwŷ Church, the chalice having an engraved representation of the crucifixion. Another gift of a citizen of London to his native parish is the gift of Roger Jones to Llaniestyn (Caern.) of a chalice with the inscription, "As oft as ye shall eate of this bread and drink this cup ye shew the Lords death till he come."

Vide also Y Cymrodor, Vol. 38, p. 123.

A chalice at Clynnog, dated 1638, is mentioned as being the earliest plate in the diocese with a Welsh inscription.

Reference should also be made to the fine service of plate given to the cathedral by William Roberts, Bishop of the Diocese from the year 1637.

Before passing from this period the student may be reminded that in any endeavour to estimate the influence of the Church in the diocese in the early part of the seventeenth century there should be borne in mind the output at this period of publications of a religious and moral character, which is generally recognised as having made the age remarkable in the history both of literature and of religion in Wales. Apart from the revised edition of the Welsh Bible, the printing of the more portable Y Bibl Bach, and the publications of the metrical versions of the Psalms, there appeared in excellent Welsh form The Homilies for reading in the churches, the classic translation into Welsh of Jewel's Apologia ecclesiae Anglicanae; the Practice of Piety under the title Yr Ymarfer o Ddunioldeb, etc., which reached a fifth edition in the course of the century; Lhwybr Hyffordd, by Robert Llwyd; while Dr. John Davies, of Mallwyd, issued the Llyfr y Resolusion and also Yr ben Lyfr Plygain a'r Gwir Gatecism with, among other contents, morning and evening prayers, a grace for use before and after meat, etc.¹

The study of the history of the diocese during the period of the Civil War and the Protectorate is rendered difficult by the cessation of the Diocesan Records, a fact in itself indicative of grave dislocation in the work of the Church.

The Bishops' Registers were no longer entered up, and in a large majority of parishes the local registers are a complete blank. Marriages had become a civil contract, with the result that even in parishes such as Llanfairfechan, where the registers were still written up, there are no entries relating to marriages.

Episcopacy was abolished in the year 1643, while the use of the Book of Common Prayer was forbidden in the year 1645, and a large number of the clergy were ejected in the course of a few years from their benefices.

Had the process of dispossession been confined to cases of insufficiency of conduct or to cases of pluralism there would have been little ground for adverse criticism, but when malignancy or disloyalty were made the excuse for ejection, such treatment, in an age of acute political and religious strife, must have lent itself to the infliction of grave injustice. It is true that, under the Propagation Act,¹ an allowance of one-fifth of the income (after deductions for parish charges) was made to the wife and children of a dispossessed clergyman, but there is evidence that even this payment tended to be irregular;² in any case the hardship and even the cruelty consequent on such treatment must be obvious. That the clergy, when ejected, frequently found refuge with friendly laity, and also in the earlier years maintained themselves by teaching, is generally known, though direct light on the lives of the ejected in this diocese is largely wanting.

²The Act made no provision for the clergyman himself.

The position may, however, be illustrated by reference to the adjoining Diocese of St. Davids. For instance, William Thomas, a Canon of St. David's Cathedral, is recorded as having "during the term of the great Rebellion been sequestered for his loyalty and then taught school at Laugharn, where he sometimes read the Common Prayer and preached, but not without some disturbance from ye itinerant preacher."¹ Likewise, reference is made in the same volume² to the case of Hugh Lloyd, D.D., and to William Nicholson, M.A.,³ the latter of whom is described as forced to keep a private school, and to the better known case of Jeremy Taylor, D.D.,⁴ who held a school in Carmarthenshire.⁵

References to the fabric of the churches are largely lacking, but there can be little doubt that they suffered the same rough treatment as is recorded in other dioceses. Browne Willis, writing in the year 1720, notes the recumbent figures of bishops mutilated during the Civil War.⁶ Moreover, the official orders issued for the ⁵At a later date the ejected clergy were forbidden even this means of securing their living. A series of orders were issued in the year 1655 for "securing the peace of the Commonwealth." Of the clauses related to the Royalist clergy, the fifth directed that none of the party (i.e. the Royalists) are to keep in their houses "chaplains, schoolmasters, ejected ministers . . . nor have their children taught by such." The sixth ordered that none who had been or shall be "ejected from any benefice . . . for delinquency or scandal are to keep any school, preach or administer the sacraments, marry persons or use the Book of Common Prayer on pain of 3 months' imprisonment, unless their hearts are changed and they obtain the approval of the Commissioners for Public Preachers" (Calendar of State Papers, Dom., 1655, p. 347). It is assumed that these orders applied to Wales, though probably here, as elsewhere, the orders were not rigidly enforced (Tatham's The Puritans in Power, pp. 235-239).

removal and demolition of church fittings and decorations must have led to grave destruction and ill-usage.¹

Apart from deliberate acts of damage it would follow that with the suspension of the normal working of the church, deterioration of the buildings would rapidly result. The records fail to show that the Bishop of Bangor held any ordination services during the period under consideration.²

In the earlier years, the treatment meted out to the clergy seems to have been less harsh and pluralism was even countenanced in some instances,³ but, with the passing, in the year 1649, of the "Act for the Better Propagation and Preaching of the Gospel in Wales," the sterner section of the Puritan party acquired increased ascendancy.

The difficulty of tracing the clergy, and of ascertaining the provision made for filling vacancies will, under the circumstances described above, be understood. Fortunately, the deficiency in the records can, to some extent, be supplied by returns preserved in the Bodleian Library, in the Lambeth Library, and elsewhere. There is, more particularly, in the Lambeth Library, a copy of an Inquisition for the County of Anglesey, dated in the year 1650.

³For instance the cases of Rowland Chedle and Evan Lloyd in Anglesey. (Appendix A.)

In the hope of making the position clearer, schedules are given in Appendix A based on the information as at present available, giving the parishes from which the clergy were ejected, the names of those, if any, appointed to succeed them, with a final column of appointments made after the Restoration. A close study of these schedules will enable the student to appreciate the grave character of the upheaval, and also to estimate with some degree of precision the treatment shown by the rival parties when in power to those opposed to them. A scrutiny of the lists suggests that the changes were more numerous in Anglesey, and less so in the southern part of the diocese, for instance, in the County of Merioneth. This may be due partly to the greater prevalence of pluralism in Anglesey and to the attempt to eradicate the abuse, and partly to the greater financial value of the parishes in that county, with the consequent temptation to secure, on the occurrence of the vacancy, the endowments belonging thereto.¹ On the other hand, the County of Merioneth was less affected by the upheaval for the opposite reason, namely, that the clergy were in possession of parishes of minor importance, both in character and in financial value.

¹The Propagation Act, 1649 provided for the creation of a common fund and for the appointment of certain Commissioners, any five of whom should have power and authority to receive all Articles and Charges which should be exhibited against any Parson, Vicar, Curate, etc., for any Delinquency, Scandal, Malignancy, or non-Residence. Further power was given, after due examination and proof, to eject such Ministers and other persons as should be adjudged guilty of any of "the Crimes aforesaid" from their respective cures. The Commissioners were then authorised and enabled to receive and dispose of all and singular the Rents issues and Profits of all and singular, the Rectories, Vicarages, etc., then or thereafter in the disposing of Parliament or any deriving authority from them; somewhat similar powers being given in respect of the Rents issues and Profits of Glebelands, etc. It may be added that, from the monies so received, the Commissioners were empowered to order and appoint a yearly maintenance for such persons approved of for the work of the ministry, etc. Vide also reference supra to the Orders dated September 1st, 1655, p. xxvii [Note].

The question arises as to the means adopted for carrying on Church life and the provision, if any, made by those in authority for filling the numerous vacancies. Dealing with the first point, it is generally recognised that the regulations forbidding the use of the Prayer Book could, to some extent, be evaded;¹ for instance, clergy compiled their own prayers based on the Prayer Book or repeated the services from memory, keeping thus within the provisions of the law that the Book itself should not be used. It is recognised further that the more remote and insignificant parishes were less subject to interference, and that, to some extent, Church life would proceed as in normal times.² This view is supported by the fewer instances of ejection in the Merionethshire portion of the diocese as above referred to.

Turning to the provision made for the parishes vacated by the dispossessed clergy, or by the death of their holders, the information at present available shows a very considerable number of parishes where, apparently, such vacancies were not filled. The Inquisition of Anglesey (LAMBETH MS)³ dated 1650, mentions fourteen parishes which, with their chapeltries, covered a very considerable area of Anglesey, from which the incumbents had been ejected, but no reference is made to any provision for supplying the same. Walker⁴ names several parishes in the County of Caernarvon where parishes were vacant for a period of six to nine years. In the County of Montgomery,¹ the Vicarage of Llanwnnog is described as vacant for five years, Llangurig for two years.

The ministers appointed by the triers do not appear until the year 1654, though it is possible that information throwing light on the point has been overlooked, but, in support of the general tradition that the parishes from which the clergy had been ejected were gravely neglected, there may be quoted, apart from the standard references touching on this point,² an extract from the recently published Calendar of Wynn Papers, a complaint bearing on the position in North Wales, namely, "The humble petition of many thousands of the six Counties of North Wales showing that since the ejecting of the ministers from their churches, silencing them, and sequestrating the tithes under colour of an Act made February 22nd, 1649, for the Propagation of the Gospel in Wales,³ divers parishes have for two years past been left vacant on the Lord's Day without any minister to officiate and administer the Sacrament of Baptism and the Lord's Gweithiau Morgan Llwyd (Davies), p. 289, contains a copy of a letter from Col. John Jones, the regicide, where he laments the indifference of the people of Merioneth to his ideals.

³This Act expired on the 25th day of March, 1653, but was continued by the orders of Cromwell (vide Calendar of State Papers, Dom., where the following entry occurs, 1653, April 25th: "General Oliver Cromwell to the Commissioners for propagating the gospel in Wales. The late Parliament not having continued the Act for the propagation of the gospel in Wales and there being no supreme power as yet settled by whose authority the liberty of the Gospel in Wales may be established, I advise you to go on cheerfully in your work, protect good men and execute all things settled by the former Act. In so doing the Lord will be with you, and you shall have fitting assistance from me, until those placed in supreme power take further orders."

They therefore petition to have their tithes accounted for and that the health of their souls, which they value above all earthly things, may be provided for by settling able and pious ministers in the parish Churches: signed by Thomas Myddleton, and Owen Wynn." (July, 1652.)

There may also be mentioned the testimony of Taylor, the poet, already quoted, who made a tour through Wales in the year 1652, and notes "that in many places and parishes they have neither service, prayer, sermon, minister or preacher or any church door opened at all."¹

There is a caustic description given of the lay preachers in the History of the Town and Burrough of Beaumaris, written circa the year 1669² "In his time there were seldom prayers or preaching in the Church The Preachers or Holders forth of the Garrison in these fanatick times were one Moris a poor labourer, one Gregory, a blindish fellow, one Benjamin, a blacksmith etc.," and the writer proceeds to describe with indignation that the said blacksmith preached in the pulpit of Beaumaris Church before the Judges of the Circuit, adding, however, that "they gained very few proselytes from town or Country."

The town in question, as being from time to time under the domination of a garrison, was doubtless ¹In the Cambrian Magazine, Vol. I (anno 1829) there is published an alleged unpublished account of the Civil War in North and South Wales, containing (p. 73) the following statement: "Many churches in Wales were empty without service, and the priests without anything to live upon."

liable to visits from the sterner and more fanatical preachers, but the quotation being the testimony of a writer who, doubtless, had been an eye witness, however prejudiced, deserves mention. The gibes of Churchmen and of Royalists, such as Huw Morris and Alexander Griffith¹ and others on the standing and ignorance of the ministers and preachers should be taken with some reserve, a like warning being necessary, the student may be reminded, in connection with the grave charges brought against the ejected clergy by their detractors.²

The Diocesan Records do not restart until the year 1682, when the ordination lists became available again, but, fortunately, the names of those appointed to benefices with the date of their admission, are preserved in the returns in the Public Record Office as from the thirteenth day of July, 1660. This information is of value as it throws light, though of a limited character, on the question of the treatment of the intruded ministers, as they are frequently described, after the Restoration. The vacancies which were filled from the month of July, 1660, to November 30th, 1663, excluding sinecure portions, number 64, or if duplicate appointments are omitted, a net 60, out of a total 97 parishes

²Baxter, the eminent Nonconformist, wrote: "They (the Commissioners) cast out all the ministers in Wales, which, though bad enough for the most part, were yet better than any of the few Itinerants they set up in their room" (Baxter's Times, p. 70).

The following, a more partisan statement, may be recorded:—

Calendar of State Papers, Dom., 1658-1659. Address of laudation and congratulations to the King on his restoration, inter alia from North Wales "hoping for the resettlement of the Church, those lately in power having, under the pretence of propagating the Gospel, shut up the Churches and converted endowments to their own use."

in the diocese exclusive of Cathedral offices. Apart from this, it is evident that in certain instances the dispossessed clergy automatically recovered their parishes without admission being entered in the lists of appointments, while a few had even retained their benefices throughout the troublous times. Such a record of change, in itself, testifies to the upheaval through which the Church had passed. A further point of interest to which attention may be drawn is the very large proportion of clergy possessed of University degrees, amongst those appointed, in itself a sign of the educational status of the Restoration Clergy in the diocese.

As already admitted, the lists, especially in the third column, are probably incomplete, and are open from time to time to amendment, but a scrutiny reveals the fact that a fair number of those entered in the third column appear also in the fourth column, having, by means of ordination or otherwise, qualified themselves for continuance in office after the Restoration.

In the County of Anglesey, it is probable that Rowland Lloyd, appointed to Amlwch in the year 1656, is the man of that name appointed to the adjoining Parish of Llanelilian in the year 1661. Hugh Humphreys similarly retained Llanelugrad. Edward Wynne retained Llangainwen, as was the case of Owen Hughes, at Llangefni. In the County of Caernarvon, William Bodrida appears from other sources to have remained at Aberdaron, likewise Evan Jones, at Llanbedrog, while Humphrey Pritchard, who appears in column three under the head of Gyffin, was apparently appointed to the adjoining Parish of Conway in the year 1662. At Llanfairfechan, Griffith Pierce, or Piers, retained Llanfairfechan. Henry Maurice, whose name appears as Minister of Llannor-Deneio, became Rector of Meillteyrne in the year 1661, though he afterwards separated from the church, while it has been suggested that the Griffith Roberts who succeeded him at Meillteyrne was the man of that name who had served at Llanengan.

In the Counties of Merioneth and Montgomery, John Ellis, at Dolgelley, and Humphrey Thomas, at Llandanwg, retained their positions.

In the Denbighshire portion of the diocese, the William Lloyd appointed to Ruthin in the year 1658 was probably the man of this name appointed to the adjoining Parish of Llanychan in the year 1661.¹

The undesirable custom of pluralism reasserted itself, and as will be noted in Anglesey, Hugh Williams re-posessed himself both of Llanrhyddlad and of Llantrisant, and Michael Evans, ejected from Llanllyfni, obtained Llanbeulan and also Llanddeusant.

Caution should be displayed in drawing dogmatic deductions from these lists, though it is claimed that the truth of generalisations made by historians should be tested by facts such as these. It is submitted, however, that a dispassionate study of the position, supported by these facts, bears out the contention that the severity shown to the clergy during the Civil War period was greater in the diocese than that shown to the intruded ministers after the Restoration. The treatment of the latter was, it is recognised, by no means light in character, and the victorious party in the Parliaments of the Restoration period passed stringent laws likely as they hoped both to strengthen the Church, of which they had become ardent supporters, and also to stamp out the opposing sects.

Reference has already been made to the large number of appointments in the lists during the years 1660-1661, and the early part of 1662, as testifying to the upheaval through which the Church had passed, but such lists of appointments further show that St. Bartholomew's Day, 1662, was not conspicuous in the diocese by undue dispossession of the intruded ministers. As will be observed, the appointments in the year named both on and after St. Bartholomew's Day were not more than normal in number, but the reasons leading to this position are still obscure and demand consideration.¹

Certain general reflections may here be made bearing on the position in the hope of enabling the student to disentangle from the mass of detail certain general principles underlying the struggle as it affected both sides in turn.

The sharp differentiation between Church and State is a modern step in human progress. In ancient societies, religion was a concern of the State, and the ministers of the public religion were the officials of the State. The latter rule had yielded to the influence of ¹It has been suggested by some writers that the working of the Propagation Act for Wales (1649) resulted in there being no specific expulsion of individual ministers after the Restoration (vide Landmarks, pp. 133, 134), but this explanation has been criticised (vide Religious Development in Wales, Introduction, xi). It may be borne in mind that the Act had expired in the year 1653, though continued with the written approval of Cromwell (vide supra, p. xxxi. (Note.)) time, but otherwise, this was still the underlying idea even in the earlier half of the seventeenth century, though not without challenge. It was this connection with a State at variance with an important section of the people, coupled with an unfortunate attempt to strengthen its position by a dangerous alliance with an exaggerated form of Divine Right of Kings, that contributed to the Church's fall. Likewise, the Puritan movement equally allied with the State, that furnished it with opportunity and power, shared in the fall of the State, its patron.¹

The ruthless treatment of those opposed to them was discreditable to the leaders on both sides, though it may in fairness be remembered that this country was free, at all events, from the worst cruelties that marked the religious wars on the Continent of Europe, and it might even be argued that the bitter experiences suffered by both sides in turn was a necessary prelude to the succeeding Toleration. Persecution seldom destroys a religion or a religious body ; they are rather strengthened in their inner and deeper lives by the disfavour of the world. Persecution, however, leaves a note of narrowness and hardness, possibly on both sides, as is evident in the seventeenth century. This tendency is seen in the Restoration Church. On the other hand, a community of suffering drew together clergy and people and contributed largely to the united strength of the Church in the diocese during the succeeding generations.

¹“ To lose sight of the interaction of secular and religious affairs is to miss the true interpretation of events throughout the whole struggle ” (Tatham's Puritans in Power, p. 64).

The period following the Restoration is generally depicted by writers as one when the moral and religious tone was distinctly low, and they incline to ascribe this largely to a reaction from the sternness and restrictions of the Puritan period. There may be truth in this view, but doubt arises whether the country, as a whole, is not to some extent being judged by the standard and morals of the Court and of the more fashionable circles of the Capital. It is easy to darken or disparage a past age, it would seem more profitable to search out its merits.

In the Diocese of Bangor the generation following the Restoration is distinguished, it is submitted, by notes indicative of a living Church and by clergy deserving of remembrance.¹ That the period was productive of able men in other dioceses is also obvious, and names spring to mind of eminent men among the Nonconformists in Wales, who, from now onward, take a permanent place in the religious history of Wales, a reminder that should give pause to the tendency hitherto prevalent of depreciating unduly the religious endeavours of the period.

In the Diocese of Bangor, the striking number of graduates among the clergy has already been noticed. The ordination lists that restart in the year 1682 show a highly creditable number of ordinands with degrees. For the last seven years of the century, the University and College of the ordinands is given, the majority coming from Oxford, more particularly from Jesus College, though Christ Church, Oriel College, and St. Mary's Hall claim their members. Cambridge also is represented.

Among the more distinguished clergy of the diocese were William Lloyd, Dean of Bangor in the year 1673, who, as Bishop of St. Asaph, was one of the Seven Bishops. John Langford, Rector of Efenechtyd and Derwen, translated into Welsh, The Whole Duty of Man.¹ Robert Jones likewise translated into Welsh Bishop Hall's Balm of Gilead. Edward Wynne, Chancellor of the Diocese, and also of Hereford Diocese, Rector of Llangainwen and of Llanllechid, wrote a Manual of Prayers in the Welsh language.² He also founded a school at Holyhead and left money for an exhibition at Oxford. John Ellis, Rector of Dolgelley from the year 1646 until the year 1666, was an author and educationist of note.³ Pierce Lewis,⁴ Rector of Llanfachreth (Anglesey) and Vicar of Bangor, was largely responsible for the issue of the Bible in the year 1690, and was known as the Oxford Rabbi. Thomas Ellis, who became Rector of Dolgelley in the year 1666, was a Welsh scholar of distinction.⁵ Edward Samuel, ordained deacon in the year 1696, and priest in the following year, was a Welsh littérateur of eminence.⁶ He published Bucheddan'r Apostolion a'r

Henry Rowlands, the distinguished author of Mona Antiqua, became Vicar of Llanidan in the year 1696. Humphrey Humphreys, Bishop of Bangor, who had been beneficed in the diocese, is generally considered an able Welsh Antiquary, and contributed to the memoirs of Welshmen in Wood's Athenae Oxonienses and in the Cambrian Register. Bishop Robert Morgan is described by his biographer and successor in the See as possessed of eloquence in preaching both in the English and in his native tongue.¹ More particularly, reference may be made to William Lloyd, Bishop of Norwich, who had been Rector of Efenechtyd,² and was a leader among the nonjuring party who, it may be noted, found recruits among the clergy of the diocese, mainly from the Vale of Clwyd. For instance, in addition to William Lloyd, Henry Price, Head Master of Ruthin School, Richard Jones, Rector of Llanychan and Chancellor of the Diocese, and Thomas Jones, Curate of Efenechtyd,³ were deprived in the year 1691.

It is not out of place to record benefactions made by clergy and others during this period for the educational advancement of their countrymen. John Ellis, Rector of Dolgelley, already mentioned, by his Will, dated December 4th, 1665, devised a tenement, the rents to be used for the teaching of poor children from Dolgelley.¹ William Lewis, a native of Llangristiolus and Rector of All Hallows by the Wall, London, by his Will, dated in the year 1681, left a considerable estate for educational purposes. Griffith Owen, a citizen and grocer of London, by his Will, dated February 3rd, 1668, left a substantial sum for the purchase of lands, the income to be utilised as to one-third for teaching writing to the poor children of Llanegrin, and the neighbourhood, and another third for the catechising of scholars and young people in the fundamentals of the Christian Church in the Parish Church of Llanegrin. The foundation of a school at Holyhead by Edward Wynne, the Chancellor of the Diocese, has been referred to previously. At a slightly earlier date, Hugh Owen, by his Will, dated July 18th, 1650, bequeathed £400 to his nephew, Lewis Owen of Peniarth, Dr. John Ellis above mentioned, and Robert Owen, Rector of Llangelynnin, for educational purposes at Llanegrin. Elinor Kynnier, by Deed made between 1689 and 1690, gave money for the setting up of a school at Amlwch.

The period 1680 to 1690 is also marked by an attempt to improve the machinery of the diocese.² The records ¹Ellis Lewis, Vicar of Rhuddlan, by his Will, dated August, 1727, devised lands to the Dean and Chapter of Bangor in support of the free Grammar School. In the year 1793 John Tamberlan, Rector of Dolgelley, by a Declaration of Trust, set aside further monies in support of the School (Charity Commission Reports).

as already stated, restart during this period, and from these years the transcripts of parish registers are filed in the Registry. The minutes of the Cathedral Chapter also begin during this time, but the volumes containing short details of business coming before the Consistory Court of the diocese run from a slightly later date.¹

In the year 1685, there was passed an Act of Parliament² securing certain tithes in the County of Montgomery, hitherto forming the endowment of a sinecure comportion of Llandinam, as a permanent endowment for the cathedral fabric and choir, the vicars of the parishes, from which the tithes came, securing a share for the augmentation of their stipends.

Apart from the newer spirit infused doubtless into the church in the diocese by the vigour of active bishops, and by the example of the clergy referred to, certain contributory movements worthy of note arose towards the end of the century of which mention should be made.

It has been pointed out by an able historical writer³ that the tide of fresh spiritual life, of which this period saw the beginning, was inspired largely by movements connected with the Rev. Thomas Gouge and with the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. Without the help of these movements the effort to strengthen the religious life would have lost much of its momentum.

¹The Tanner MSS. in the Bodlean Library are disappointingly brief in references to this diocese.

²Jac II, 1685 (vide Browne Willis, p. 291).

³The Reverend Thomas Shankland, M.A., in a series of articles entitled "Diwygwyr Cymru," published in Seren Gomer, 1900-1904; also an important article by him in the Transactions of the Honourable Society of Cymmrodorion, session 1904-1905. Mr. Shankland, a Baptist minister and Librarian to the University College of North Wales, was a pioneer in bringing forward and treating with sympathy the religious work of the seventeenth century in its later decades.

The publication of Welsh devotional books, the fresh editions of the Bible and Prayer Book in Welsh, the establishment of schools, more particularly of Charity Schools, the formation of religious classes, all met with the active support of Gouge and his friends, and by the Society in question, which succeeded to and took up their work.¹ Evidence is lacking as to the establishment of religious classes in the diocese, but certain schools were started as shown in the minutes of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, from which the following few examples are taken as illustrations² :—

Dr. John Jones, Dean of Bangor, December, 1699 : “that he has set up schools for ye poorer sort at his own charge, but of late their poverty is so great that they cannot allow themselves time to learn.” Mr. Robert Wynne from Caernarvon, April, 1700, wrote “that divers of the clergy have contributed towards schools and others disposed to do like : doubt not of success, if the next diocesan patronises their design.” He further writes “That the Bishop of Bangor had given a strict charge to his clergy to meet frequently, and had given them directions to such purposes and that the bishop was frequently present.”³ The above-mentioned Robert Wynne, writing from Caernarvon in the year 1700 further states “that the clergy of each

The Plas Gwyn MSS. (National Library) contain a copy of a letter from the Bishop urging the clergy of Anglesey to divide into groups and to hold monthly meetings. The records show that one group at least held such meetings.

deanery meet by themselves and make it their constant endeavour to stir up each other to a strict and conscientious discharge of their ministerial functions, that divers of the clergy have contributed towards schools and are disposed to do ye like and great numbers have been lately taught to read, that the bishop and his clergy have been at the sole charge of printing the Welsh books lately translated.”¹ Dr. John Jones, also writing in answer to the society’s circular letter, thanking them for the last packet of books, says “that a Charity School is lately erected at Beaumaris, at Llanfihangel Ysceifiog, at Bangor, at Llanllechid, at Gyffin; the number of children dealt with, reaching from ten to fifteen in each case.” He refers again to the great poverty of the children and their parents. George Lewis, Rector of Dolgelley, reports in the year 1716, that there is no Charity School at Dolgelley or the neighbourhood, and urges the society to set up a school. In reply, the society state “As to encouraging a Charity School at Dolgelley, the secretary being informed that the Reverend Mr. Owens has already a school there . . . if you think that he be a proper person to be encouraged . . . and if the inhabitants of ability will contribute, the society will not be backward, etc.” As emphasising the poverty of the people the Dean writes, “that it is impossible in these parts (Caernarvonshire) to fix the poor children constantly and regularly at school, because they must go ever and anon to beg for victuals . . . and in harvest the poor parents take them out of school and declare they had rather they should not be taught at all than be debarred of the use and service of them.”¹

This brief summary of the initial stages of this new movement and the reference to the clergy at work in the diocese may justify the student in claiming that the eighteenth century opened with bright promise for the church in the diocese.

Bishop Humphreys, an able and sympathetic bishop, still ruled,² and Dr. John Jones continued dean until the year 1727. By his Will, it may here be mentioned, the latter bequeathed five sums of £100, a considerable figure in those days, for the furtherance of education in parishes with which he had been connected, namely, Aber, Llanllechid, Gyffin, Bangor, Llanddyfnan with Pentraeth: the purpose of his gifts being that the children should be instructed to read the Bible and Common Prayer Book in Welsh, and be also taught the Catechism of the Church of England in Welsh. He also bequeathed sums of fifty pounds each for the same purpose to Llandegfan, to Rhoscolyn and its Chapelries, and to Llandecwyn and its Chapelry.

Among the clergy were Elis Wynne, of Lasynys³ the author of Y Bardd Cwsg, who published also a

See also The History of the Diocese of St. Asaph, p. 133, where Archdeacon Thomas points out the fact that some of the licences issued to the clergy, and especially assistant curates, during the period 1683-1687, show how often they combined with such office that of schoolmaster (Ludi-majister). Unfortunately, the licences in Bangor diocese at this period are missing, but it is very probable that a similar policy would prevail in this diocese. See Parochialia by Edward Lhwyt (Arch. Camb., 1909, p. 148), where, under Llanfair D.C. (then in the diocese of Bangor), it is recorded “that one Mr. Edward Price has ten pounds a year towards reading prayers and keeping a school free for those of the parish.”

Edward Samuel has already been referred to. He had passed over to the Diocese of St. Asaph in the early years of the century, but a claim made by him in the year 1725 deserves to be quoted.¹ "To God be praise," he said, "the light of the Gospel shines as bright to-day as in any other Country,² there are more pious and useful books printed, many more and probably better preachers to-day than we have had among us at any period for more than a thousand years." He may have been an optimist³ looking out on the world with a kindly eye, but his testimony as being that of a distinguished Welshman is deserving of consideration equally with the laments of the pessimist

²It is recognised that Dr. Erasmus Saunders wrote a dispiriting account of the Diocese of St. David's at this time. South Wales, it is generally recognised, had suffered more heavily from appropriation of parishes to monasteries, and the subsequent diversion of the endowments, with the result that the machinery of the Church had been subjected to a greater strain in South Wales.

He became Rector of Bettws Gwerfyl Goch (1702) and Rector of Llangan (1720) (vide The History of the Diocese of St. Asaph).

³The favourable testimony of William Lloyd, Bishop of St. Asaph at the latter part of the century, and previously Dean of Bangor, deserves consideration, as he refers to the state of the Church in North Wales, as well as in his own diocese. He again, it is admitted, may have been an optimist (The History of the Diocese of St. Asaph, p. 131).

or the rhetoric of the revivalist. As the eighteenth century advances into its second decade the Registers throw ominous light on the episcopal working of the diocese. In the List of Ordinations, it will be observed that a complete gap occurs for the years 1714-1721 inclusive, and inquiry will show that this term covered the episcopate of Samuel Hoadley. It is outside the scope of this Introduction to touch on the Bangorian controversy connected with his name.¹ It is stated in general histories that, for six years he failed to visit his diocese, and the Registers seem to testify to his absence. Candidates for the Ministry were doubtless ordained during the period in question, so ordination was doubtless conferred by neighbouring bishops by means of Letters Dimissory, or, possibly, candidates travelled to the place where the Bishop of Bangor resided, though in such case the fact of ordination should have been entered in the Registers. This record of Bishop Hoadley is the beginning of a period covering many generations when the chief pastorate of the diocese was held by men alien to the country, many of them largely non-resident and regarding the See as a stepping stone to more important dioceses. The evil was not without precedent: three centuries earlier, namely, in the fifteenth and in the early part of the sixteenth century² a similar policy had been followed and then, as at the close of the eighteenth century, it was an important contributory cause of the upheaval which shook the Church to its foundations.

At this point a reference may be made to Nonconformity in the diocese during the generations immediately following the Restoration. While making every allowance for the difficulties of its adherents, when faced with the Restoration penal laws, the evanescent impression it produced upon the people, as compared with the influence achieved more than a century later, is somewhat striking. The Bishop of Bangor (Robert Morgan), in the year 1669, reported that "no conventicles" were in existence¹, but the figures published a few years later suggest that this report was based, possibly, on inaccurate information, though the census of "Sec-taries," ordered by Archbishop Sheldon in the year 1676, seems to show that their numbers were very limited.² Clynnog, Llangybi, and Deneio were centres of small groups, as also was the Arwystli end of the diocese, though the whole number of Nonconformists was apparently under 500, the County of Anglesey being almost entirely a Conformist district. It may be noted that Bronclwydwr, the home of Hugh Owen, an eminent leader, was situate near Dolgelley, in the diocese. The position of Nonconformity in the district during the years after the passing of the Toleration Act does not appear to have been seriously studied, and the information as at present available suggests that, apart from local and sporadic efforts, its work and influence in this district was of little account until the latter decades of the eighteenth century.

¹LAMBETH MS. 639, f. 140. The Calendar of State Papers, Dom., anno 1672, p. 574, contain a reference to licences granted to six persons in the county of Caernarvon, two described as Presbyterians, one as a Congregationalist, two as Independents, and one without description.

²These, for the dioceses of Wales, are preserved in the William Salt library at Stafford. The census has been subjected to careful study by Dr. Thomas Richards in The Religious Census of 1676 (Cymrodorion Society). Vide also the same writer, The Puritan Visitation of Jesus College, Oxford (Transactions of the Honourable Society of Cymrodorion). All statistics of this type should be taken as only approximately correct.

In the year 1730, the records of the Consistory Court of the Diocese become available, though in a very abbreviated form, little information being entered in the Court Book beyond the bare heading of each particular case. Towards the middle of the century an occasional reference is made in these records bearing on the subject of early Nonconformity; for instance, in the year 1742, a charge is brought against Richard Jenkinson, of Llanidloes¹ for preaching in improper places without a licence, and also in the following year, against several unnamed parties in the same town for keeping unlawful meetings in houses and for suffering persons not qualified to preach or exhort. A similar charge was made against Robert Ellis, of Llanberis, and in the year 1747 against persons at Llangian, Melltiern, and Llanengan for being present to hear unlawful preachers, especially one "Griffith Bevan Lewis," described as "a presumptuous strolling person," while Nathaniel Breese is accused of keeping unlawful assemblies at Carno.

An important document becomes available in the year 1749, being a complete return made by the clergy to elaborate visitation queries issued by Bishop Zachary Pearce, then bishop of the diocese. The replies help to throw light on the detailed working of the Church, including the strength of Nonconformity, but the figures, as with other similar returns, must be taken with reserve as being possibly biassed and in any case not checked by impartial persons, but approximately the information as touching on Nonconformity is probably accurate, as is shown by a comparison with the details provided in the Sheldon Census of the year 1676. For instance, the districts where Nonconformity is reported as existent correspond with the districts named in the Sheldon Census, namely, Denio, the Lleyn Peninsula, and the Arwystli portion of the diocese. In the year 1749, Anglesey, the whole of Caernarvonshire, with the exceptions named and except Llanberis and a district at the higher end of the Conway Valley, the whole of Merionethshire and the Dyffryn Clwyd area of the diocese are almost entirely Conformist. In certain cases, the definite statement is made that a meeting house, whether licensed or not, existed, but of more interest is the very general remark that the teachers came from South Wales, the reply from the Parish of Llangelynin, in the County of Merioneth, more particularly emphasising this point in the answer that "the parish was a great thoroughfare through which are frequently seen troops of Methodists passing and repassing on their way from South Wales to Caernarvonshire." Detailed study may correct the impression that the old Nonconformity, namely, the Presbyterians, Independents, and Anabaptists had, to a large extent, remained numerically stationary during the three quarters of a century since the Sheldon return, the increase which the Visitation Return of 1749 seems to suggest being caused by the advent of the Methodists, though up to the year 1749 the growth is very moderate in its extent. The presence of Quakers is reported at Dolgelley, Llangelynin (Mer.), Talylyn, Trefeglwys, Llanidloes, and Llangurig.¹

This slow advance was probably to some extent due to the fact that Nonconformity in its origin was not a product of the Welsh area of North Wales. During the Commonwealth, as is generally recognised, the leaders came very largely from the eastern or more Anglicised part of Wales, and it was only as the eighteenth century advanced towards its middle period that momentum was given to the movement by the itinerant teachers from South Wales who were connected very largely with the rising Methodism.

Reverting to the strictly Church aspect of the period, the Records of the Consistory Court, even in their very abbreviated form, throw occasional light on the condition of the diocese. For instance, in the year 1730, they show the incumbents of Llanychan (Edward Lloyd), of Llanellidan (William Bulkeley), and of Derwen (John Conway) as charged with non-residence. In each case a marginal note tells of the production in due course of a certificate testifying that residence had been taken ¹The names of local teachers, as they are called, are occasionally given. Thus at Llanberis the teachers were John Francis, Lewis Evans, and John Morgan. At Llangwnadl, Hugh Thomas. At Llanidloes, Matthew Miles, a Presbyterian; Thomas Davies, an Anabaptist; Even Jenkins, a shoemaker; and Reginald Cleaton and Benjamin Rowland, farmers. At Llanwnnog, in addition to Jenkin Evans, there is mentioned John Reynolds, a shoemaker; and Lewis Lewis of Llanllugan, a weaver. At Llangurig, Evan Morgan, a weaver.

At Holyhead the teacher of the Methodists was Owen David, a cooper, who also visited Llanfachreth. At Llanfechell two families were reported as Presbyterians, their teacher being Jenkin Morgan, a weaver, who also taught a few Presbyterians at Hen Eglwys and two families of Independents at Llangefni, where there were a few Methodists. The reply is frequently made that the teachers of the Methodists were clergymen from South Wales, St. David's diocese being mentioned in one instance, or when names are given they are those of Howell Harries, Daniel Rowlands, Benjamin Thomas.

up by those named. Several instances occur of charges brought against parishioners of erecting seats in churches without authority, to the prejudice of the complainants. Subtraction of fees, dues, and of tithe came before the court, and misconduct during divine service were dealt with. In the year 1730 there is an entry of a complaint against Elis Wynne of Lasynys, for neglect of duty under the heading of Llanfair Juxta Harlech, at the suit of Maurice Lloyd, but the record fails to show the details or the results. Harmony was apparently lacking in the district, for under the heading of Llanfair Llandanwg an entry shows that a grant of a seat in the church at Llandanwg, at the suit of Maurice Lloyd, was opposed by the Reverend Elis Wynne and John Poole. Further in the same year, under the heading of Llanfair Llanenddwyn, a charge is brought by Maurice Lloyd in the Consistory Court against the Reverend Einion Humphreys, of choosing and nominating a certain Robert Griffith to the office of Parish Clerk against the canon.

The Ordination Lists show that the ordinands were to a large extent graduates, and in certain years the number ordained was satisfactory, though several years show a paucity of candidates. The names of the ordinands and of those appointed to benefices were overwhelmingly Welsh, but among the former we fail to find the name of the eminent poet, Goronwy Owen. A portion of his Letters Testimonial, submitted to the Bishop of Bangor prior to his ordination as deacon, has been preserved in the Registry and has been published in the Bulletin of Celtic Studies (1921-1923, p. 357).

It is dated the fifteenth day of January, 1745-1746, and would, in the ordinary course, be filed a few weeks prior to his ordination. In this instance the ordination service would probably be held in Lent, but no mention of such a service is preserved. An ordination service was held, as the Records show, in the month of July, 1745, and also in the month of September, 1746. Possibly, during the intervening period, candidates, if any, were ordained by a neighbouring bishop at his own ordination, on behalf of the Bishop of Bangor, though it is more probable that the actual record of the ordination at Bangor has been lost or was not entered at the time.

Not only is the record of Goronwy Owen's ordination as deacon wanting, but exact information as to the title on which he was ordained is also lacking. As a result of searching inquiry recently made¹ into his early clerical career, it appears that he had officiated in the neighbourhood of Pwllheli, as is definitely stated in the Letters Testimonial filed at St. Asaph, to which diocese he had moved, prior to his ordination as priest. These particular Letters Testimonial were signed by Andrew Edwards, Master of Pwllheli Grammar School and Perpetual Curate of Abererch² and Edward Price, Rector of Edern.

²He signs the Return in respect of Abererch to the Visitation Queries in the year 1749. He there describes himself as Schoolmaster of Pwllheli. In the year 1741, a deacon, William Lloyd, was ordained on the title granted by Mr. Edwards of Abererch.

The results of such research seem to call for revision in the accounts hitherto accepted of the poet's clerical life in the diocese, even in the account as given by himself,¹ but his somewhat petulant reference to the John Ellis whom he describes as "a young clergyman of a very great fortune" for whom, according to his own account,¹ he was forced to make way in the curacy of Llanfair, M.E., may be read with pardonable allowance in the light of the facts as disclosed by the register, and probably then known to him, namely that the John Ellis in question within four years of his ordination as priest² was appointed Rector of Llansadwrn, Precentor of the Cathedral, and Vicar of Bangor successively.³

Among the clergy of the diocese to whom reference is made in the letters of Goronwy Owen there may be mentioned Thomas Ellis, minister of Holyhead, a supporter of the work of "The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge," while he speaks in terms of praise of Hugh Williams, Rector of Aberffraw,⁴ and of his old teachers Andrew Edwards, already referred to, who ultimately became Rector of Aber and Chancellor of the Cathedral, and of Edward Bennet, Rector of Llanrhyddlad, and Mr. Jones, Rector of Llanfaethlu, ²Ordained in the month of September, 1746, and described as "John Ellis, Ll.B., Llanvair and Llanbedr in Anglesey."

³In the year 1754 he became Archdeacon of Merioneth, and in the following year Rector of Llantrisant (Anglesey), both of which he held with the Vicarage of Bangor until his death in the year 1785.

⁴Edited an edition of the Welsh metrical version of the Psalms by Edmund Prys (Eminent Welshmen, by Roberts).

William Wynne,¹ who became Rector of Llancynhaval in the diocese, a fellow poet, is mentioned in the letters.

A perusal of the printed letters of the brothers Lewis, Richard, William, and John Morris,² natives of Anglesey who knew the country and its people so well, is helpful in throwing light on the position and influence of the Church in the middle of the century, though the brevity of the references tantalises the reader. The brothers were earnest churchmen in touch with the clergy, and the absence both of any serious suggestion in the letters that the Church was losing its hold over the people or of any warning of the coming catastrophe deserves consideration. The letters extend over a period of 37 years (1728-1765), during a portion of which period the Rev. Thomas Ellis was Vicar of Holyhead. For him the highest possible regard is expressed and continual mention is made of his good works in actively pressing forward the circulation of the Scriptures in Welsh,² in reforming the celebration of the Gwylmabsant, and of his zeal in forcing stricter observance of Sunday and in other directions. In one place he is described as "the golden tongued." Several other clergy are spoken of with respect, including Richard Bulkeley, Rector of Llanfechell. William Morris was a regular attendant at Church and tells of his visits to attend services at several parish churches, including ¹Appointed in 1749. It is considered that his poem on the "Day of Judgement" is second only to the celebrated work on the same subject by Goronwy Owen (Eminent Welshmen, by Roberts).

²The Morris letters contain many references to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge and to the question of the Publication and circulation of Welsh Bibles and Prayer Books. In the year 1742 William Morris, writing to his brother Richard, mentions that the Bishop of Bangor, on the advice of Mr. Ellis, Vicar of Holyhead, had undertaken to press the Society to print two or three Welsh pamphlets annually for the benefit of Wales (Vol. I, p. 66).

that of his old home when revisiting his parents, and of the numerous old friends who also were worshippers. Their father, when in advanced age and resident at Llanerchymedd, is described as able to attend church three times every week.¹ In one instance only, namely, in that of Llanfugail, is there complaint as to the dilapidated state of Church fabrics and the lack of services. A possible explanation of the alleged ruined condition of this church might be found in its proximity to Llanfachreth and the uselessness of maintaining it, but ultimately it was restored. Frankness demands a reference to a letter¹ wherein William Morris writes: "this Country which some years ago might be said not to have six persons within it of any persuasion than that of the Church of England is now full of Methodists, Independants and Presbyterians or some other sect, the Lord knows what. The Welsh call them 'Pennau gwynnion;' they have licensed preachers and chapels." This passage is characteristic of the somewhat exaggerated style of descriptive writing often adopted by him or his brothers in their mutual letters.² Other sources of information, including the returns of the clergy to Bishop Zackary Pearce's queries, even allowing for the opposite tendency to minimise the advances of dissent, throw great doubt on the accuracy of the statement at the particular period to which it applies. It is, however, clear from the letters that the Methodists were already attracting attention in the county, and the correspondence refers to them on several occasions with a certain measure of disapproval.

¹Vol. I, p. 83.

²For instance, Lewis Morris writes, "I would for my part sooner deal with a Turk or a Jew than with a London Welshman."

There is also available for the County of Anglesey a manuscript diary, kept by Mr. Bulkeley, of Brynddu, in the Parish of Llanfechell, covering the period 1734-1760¹ The diarist continually records his attendance at church, giving the text of the sermon. On one occasion he describes the discourse as "good," while to show his impartiality he calls another sermon "dry."² In one place he mentions that the parson gave no sermon in the morning, but he catechised in the evening and spent two hours in the expounding of it. For many Easters he gives the number of communicants; for instance, starting in the year 1734, he records a total number of 230 communicants, including those present on Easter eve.³ He then proceeds that he had known a larger number, but that the parish had a few years previously suffered a great mortality which destroyed almost half the population. In the last year of record, the number of communicants at Easter was given as 217. On one Easter evening he describes the church as being very full; and as showing the habits of the people at that period, the point may be noted that on one occasion the parson, with 14 or 15 or more of the parishioners, after evening service, went to drink the sexton's (Roger Hughes) ale. Two days later, mention is made of a ¹There is a gap of four years, 1743-1747. The MS is deposited in the library at the University College, Bangor.

²At a later stage he became more impatient with the preacher. The sermons, he complains, were too general and not direct in their application. On one occasion he complains that the sermon dealt, for the most part, with "The Eternity of Hell Torments." On another occasion, namely on November 5th, 1749, he complains that the Rector preached an excellent sermon in defence of Transubstantiation (sic), though the day was appointed to return God thanks for delivering this nation from Popery. On more than one occasion he records in the diary that a sermon had been preached in two parts, being begun on one Sunday and finished on another Sunday.

³The Bishop Zachary Pearce Return gives the number of families as 90, so the population may be calculated as 450.

great football match between 12 men of Llanrhyddlad parish and 12 men of Llanfairynghornwy and Llanrhydrus parish. The game lasted three to four hours and was witnessed by four to five hundred spectators.

The diarist condemns Owen Lloyd, Rector of Llanddeusant, for having been an absentee, and for getting the bishop to ordain an inferior man to act as his curate at a low stipend.

The fabrics of the churches, judged by modern standards, were probably in a poor state¹; in fact, to a large extent, the actual structures, though interesting, were little better or more striking than the surrounding dwelling houses which, in Anglesey, they so frequently resembled. As already mentioned, in some parts of the diocese they would be largely thatched and would require continuous repair. Burials inside the churches were common,² and this custom would tend to accentuate the unevenness of the floors of the church, which were seldom paved. A reference is made in the letters of the Morris brothers to the burial of their mother outside the church, as a somewhat unusual event. Likewise, Mr. Bulkeley, of Brynddu, refers in his diary to a vestry meeting, when provision was made for marsh rushes, or morass, to be laid on the floor of the church six times in the year, and in the several seats and benches therein; provision was also made for common green rushes.³ Evidence is not sufficient to show the date at which the screens had been removed,

¹*Vide supra*, where it is noted that the Morris letters mention Llanfugail Church only as being in a grave state of disrepair (Vol. I, p. 486).

but probably the Western Galleries were largely erected in the latter part of the sixteenth century or in the course of the seventeenth century, and the early years of the following century, the woodwork of the screens, as traces still show, being partly used for this purpose. The galleries would, in some places, be required to accommodate the singers who previously would take up their stand on the screen and also for the musicians. During the later years the galleries were doubtless largely erected to meet the demands of the increasing population.¹

The letters of Goronwy Owen further introduce a reader to certain names connected with the Diocese of Bangor, and not without influence on the religious life of the country. The names are those of David Jones, the Sexton of Trefriw, in the Valley of the Conway, who, with Evan Evans (Ieuan Brydydd Hir), the curate of the parish (1759-1761), formed a unique partnership, both zealous churchmen and imbued even with greater zeal for the literature of their country.² Across the river, but in the Diocese of St. Asaph, lived Ellis Roberts, the cooper, the Sexton of Llanddoget, a kindred spirit. David Jones and Ellis Roberts held a prominent place among the ballad writers and chapmen. The extensive publication in the middle and later half of the eighteenth century of ballads, chapbooks, and anthologies of popular verse bears witness to the popularity of this form of composition, but with the rise of the revivalists a natural tendency would arise to discourage and finally belittle its work and influence.¹

The balladmen and chapmen probably shared the weaknesses of their age, but writers in the twentieth century have begun to recall the movement in a more unbiassed and friendly spirit. It has even been pointed out that most of the extant work of David Jones is of a religious type, and that his series of eight letters which are really short prose homilies were in great demand among religious people. The letters of the Morris brothers refer to the existence of interludes; for instance, the people are described as playing an interlude at the Llandudno Gwyl-Mabsant, and the letters mention the effort of Mr. Ellis, the Vicar of Holyhead, to get the people to listen to the Holy Scriptures rather than to interludes. Mr. Bulkeley, of Brynddu, in his diary already referred to, condemns interludes in vigorous fashion. Writing on May 30, 1737, he says "a few people in the morning service and none at all in the evening by reason of the abominable custom of playing interludes, which being so dull, stupid and artless in the matter and acting, it is astonishing how anybody of common sense can have the patience to behold it, besides the certain consequences of enticing peoples' servants and in making them unfit for any business a day or two afterwards." Apart from the coarseness which is alleged to have characterised the ¹It is mentioned in a memoir of John Elias (Morgan), p. 68, that he drove the players entirely out of Anglesey by means of his sermons, though they tried to make him an object of ridicule on the stage.

interludes, the tendency to attack or ridicule existing customs and modes of life was inevitable and would not commend them to those in authority.

A pleasing side of life in Anglesey is noted by William Morris, when he describes in a letter,¹ a party "including the parson of Llanallgo, a Mr. Foulk Jones, y trumpeter gynt . . . the best violin, perhaps, in Wales, Telyn ein nith, Marget Owen, who plays very pretty and Ffoukyn Violin, the parson, father, myself singing to the harp." He refers to the choir in Holyhead Church and to the need of suitable music for the Psalms, while mention is made of Evan Williams, a musician who composed eight of the Psalm tunes bound with the metrical version of the Book of Psalms.²

At this point fuller reference may be made to the return compiled on the occasion of the visitation held by Bishop Zackary Pearce in the year 1749. It is, so far as is known, the earliest extant document of its type relating to the diocese, and it may be taken as marking generally a stage in the history of the Church. Two centuries, approximately, had passed since the occurrence of the main events that marked the Reformation of the sixteenth century. During this long period, judging by available information, the Church had served the country well and had, as a result, secured the affection and support of the people. The one general set-back had occurred during the Commonwealth period, but this was followed by a rebound which, for the time, strengthened the position of the Church.

The return consists of a set of questions addressed to the incumbents and of their replies thereto. The questions refer to the residence of the clergy, the number of services in church, of communicants at Easter, and of families in the parish. It also seeks for information as to whether the children were duly catechised, whether there were any Protestant Dissenters, Methodists, or Papists in the parish and the number thereof.¹ There is also a query as to the existence of any Public or "Charity School,"¹ Almshouse, and so forth.

The replies seem to show a fair measure of regularity in the conduct of the services. The Holy Communion was administered on the Great Festivals at the least, and in most parishes, monthly, and the children were catechised, as a rule, every Sunday in Lent as required by the Rubric. An estimate is in each case given of the number of families, from which an approximate calculation can be formed of the population. The number of communicants at Easter is very remarkable, when we consider the population of the parishes, and seems to show that, after making allowance for the young, the old, and the infirm, the main body of adults were communicants.

Of organisation in the modern sense of the word there is little sign, but the circumstances of the times and the lack of travelling facilities did not lend themselves to this.² Pluralism, that curse of the Church for so many centuries, continued. Parsonage houses were few in number, and until provision was made by Statute¹ whereby capital monies could be borrowed for building purposes and the repayment with interest charged on the income of a benefice, little advance was possible in making good the lack of resident houses for the clergy, and it was left to individual incumbents to purchase or rent private houses. At the same time the existence should be recognised of a certain number of houses, inherited from earlier days, which, at a later date, were enlarged or rebuilt as parsonage houses.

Bishop Zackary Pearce was an absentee, and his register of ordinations shows a record scarcely better than that of Bishop Hoadley. During the eight to nine years of his episcopate there is no entry of ordination services in Bangor Diocese in the years 1750, 1753 to 1756 inclusive, but several entries are given of ordination services held by the Bishop in London on behalf of English Bishops. With a Bishop, for all practical purposes, an absentee, the tendency would be for incumbents also to remain absentees and non-resident in their parishes, and the return in question shows this to have been the case in an undesirable number of cases.

With regard to popular education,² it is evident from the return that the circulating schools of the Reverend Griffith Jones, of Llanddowror, were at work, and a considerable number are recorded. The work so ²In considering the question of education in the eighteenth century, there should be borne in mind the large number that passed to the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. started, though mainly confined to the teaching of the people to read the Scriptures and the services of the Church in Welsh, doubtless proved, apart from its religious influence, a valuable intellectual stimulus. The queries seem to restrict the reference to the particular year dealt with, namely, 1749, as is evident from the replies, and they fail to show the number of schools previously opened, but the list of parishes where such schools were at work in the year 1749, or had quite recently been at work, is worth recording; the parishes are as follows: Llanwnda, Llanrug, Llanddeiniolen, Llandegai, Dolwyddelan, Llanengan, Nevin, Abererch, Edern, Llangian, Llandegwning, Llangwyfan, D.C., Llandyrnog, Llanbedr, D.C., Llanfwrog, D.C., Llanbeulan, Llanfwrog (Anglesey), Llangefni. In other parishes mention is made of charity schools, supported generally by a small endowment, namely, Clynnog, Llanwnda, Llanbebblick (where a school is kept by the curate), Llanllechid, Aber, Gyffin, Caerhun (the curate being the master), Penmachno (the school being held in church), Pwllheli, Llanystumdwy, Dolgelley, Llaneigrin, Llandecwyn, Harlech, Carno, Llanrhaiadr, Holyhead, where Dr. Wynne, Chancellor of Hereford, had erected a school in the churchyard, Llanfechell,¹ Aberffraw, Amlwch, Llanfihangel Ysceifiog.² The return states "At Pwllheli there is a Charity School endowed with the interest of £100 in the disposal and under the direction of Mr. Vaughan of Nanney, Mr. Andrew

Edwards being the Master and John Roberts the Curate is teacher.”¹

The registers bear reference to licences issued to schoolmasters; for instance, in the year 1732 there is a reference to Penmachno school, and to Robert Jones and David Pritchard licensed at Llanidloes in the year 1734. Jeremiah Griffiths was admitted as schoolmaster at Caernarvon in 1742, John Beaver as schoolmaster to teach the English tongue at Aberffraw in the year 1746, and Richard Parry for the same purpose at Amlwch, in the year 1747. In the year 1756 John Jones, of Harlech, was licensed to teach the English and Welsh tongues in Llandanwg, and Evan Evans was licensed to keep a school at Rhoscolyn in the year 1764.

Passing from the return in question to consideration of the position of the Church and clergy as the century advances towards its close, the grave charge repeated by various writers that the spiritual influence of the Church in Wales was failing can hardly be contested, and the plea that the position was not wholly dissimilar in England does not seem a sufficient reply, though it may be pointed out as a partial explanation that the momentum given to the Church by the remarkable Welsh churchmen of the Elizabethan and early Caroline periods and by the driving force of those times had waned under the pressure of the latitudinarianism of the eighteenth century. The world was tired of the fierce religious contests of the two preceding centuries. Caution and moderation became the normal characteristics of the Church and enthusiasm became suspect, with the result that the period became one of lethargy instead of activity, of worldliness instead of spirituality. A distinguished modern historian¹ has summarised the forces that combined to check all desire, whether in Church or in State, to effect reforms essential to meet the changing conditions of the times.

The clergy of the diocese, as shown in the registers, were almost entirely Welsh in name and a large majority were graduates of Oxford and Cambridge, but not a single Welsh name appears in the list of the bishops, while the fact that the See was continually used as a stepping stone to more important bishoprics, a policy productive of frequent change in the personnel of the episcopate, aggravated the evil. As a whole, it can hardly be claimed that the lists of the clergy included those of men of any remarkable distinction. The period was rather one of mediocrity and the clergy ceased to be religious, educational, and literary pioneers. Mention may, however, be made of some² who appear in the records and are deserving of remembrance; for instance, Hugh Davies, Rector of Llandegfan, afterwards of Aber, an eminent naturalist and author of a work on the Botany of Anglesey;³ Lewis Hughes, a Senior Wrangler and Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, who, with the Rectory of Llangadwaladr,

Such reaction, he argues, gave such institutions "a sacrosanct character which helped to protect them against wise and legal reform for a hundred and forty years to come." There may also be borne in mind the fears excited by the excesses of the French Revolution, a feeling which told mainly against reform towards the end of the century.

On the other hand, mention should be made of Dr. Thomas Bowles,¹ appointed to the Rectory of Trefdraeth in the year 1766. The legality of his appointment was challenged on the ground of his ignorance of the Welsh language, but the Dean of Arches, before whom the case came, decided that as institution, induction, and complete possession had been given, such ignorance could not be considered a sufficient cause for deprivation.

Although the confession that the Church was a spent force in the diocese during the latter decades of the eighteenth century is probably justified, it is at the same time doubtless equally correct to claim that, outwardly, it retained the spiritual allegiance of the mass of the people, though this loyalty may have been due to force of habit and inherited custom. In the actual life of the common people the Parish Church still figured as the centre of parochial life. The chief festival of many parishes was the Gwyl-Mabsant held in the vicinity of the church. The periods of the year were still reckoned in common talk by the festivals of the Church, and the chief stepping stones in the lives of the people were all celebrated in, and were closely associated with, the Parish Church.² The vestry was the parliament of the parish, the incumbent being the chairman. The Records of the Consistory Court, even in their abbreviated form, testify to the watch kept over the morals of the people and to the punishments, including public penances, inflicted by the Church upon the offenders. The incumbent and churchwardens were largely the dispensers of the charities of the parish, and here it should be remembered in some mitigation of the severity with which the eighteenth century is frequently judged, that it witnessed innumerable gifts of charities.¹ It was an age of benevolence if not of spirituality, and the number of charities that came into being is remarkable. They were directed mainly to the alleviation of the sufferings of the poor and aged, in providing funds for grants of bread and clothing, and pensions to the aged.²

Even the local customs and practices handed down into the nineteenth century³ as customary at marriages, or more especially at services connected with the burial of the dead, are not those of a people of an irreligious age, and in support of this contention a quotation from Pennant's *Tour in Wales*⁴ seems apposite, when the old antiquary describes his feelings of respectful wonder as his boatmen, on making for Bardsey, "seemed tinctured with the piety of the place, for they had not rowed far before they made a full stop, pulled off their caps and offered up a short prayer." There may also be borne in mind the observations of tourists who, during the latter half of the century, began to visit the country, for, on the whole, such are complimentary to the peasantry and to their general character. The Reverend John Elias, the eminent revivalist, born in the year 1774, in the County of Caernarvon, in a short autobiography written towards the end of his life, speaks in high terms of the moral and religious example set before him by his grandfather, whom he describes as a true churchman, with whom, when a young boy, he regularly attended the parish church. "My grandfather," he says, "used to have family worship in his house morning and evening, or he would read a chapter in the Bible, with Mr. P. Williams' exposition, then he would pray in one of those excellent forms of Mr. G. Jones, of Llanddowror, in a very devout and serious manner. In the parish church he (my grandfather) used to lift me up to some elevated place to read and make responses after the minister" (Memoir of John Elias, by Morgan, 1844). The remembrance is also fresh in the mind of the writer of this Introduction of an old Welsh lady, a Welsh-speaking native of Merionethshire, born about the year 1790 and bred in the traditions of the eighteenth century, who, in the ninetieth year of her life, when attending service at her parish church, noticed as she proceeded up the aisle at Morning Prayer that the General Confession had begun. On her knees on the cold flagstones the old lady dropped, and remained kneeling until the Absolution had been pronounced.

It is difficult to disprove the charge that the close of the century found the fabrics of the churches in a grave state of disrepair. Had their condition been otherwise the extensive restoration and rebuilding undertaken in the nineteenth century would not have been necessary. Dr. Johnson described the churches in some parts as “mean and neglected to a degree scarcely imaginable. They have no pavements and the earth is full of holes. The seats are rude benches and the altars have no rails.” In the eyes of Dr. Johnson and other visitors from the Midlands or the South of England, the humble character of the churches so common in the diocese probably raised some measure of wonder and disapproval, it being left to later generations to appreciate the fitness of the little fabrics to the surroundings in which they were set and to appraise more justly the details of the work of the native builders.¹

As illustrating the condition of Wales and the Welsh people as it appeared to the early revivalists it may be appropriate to give an account of the State of Life and Religion in Wales about the year 1775, published in the year 1799 in the Trysorfa, a Welsh periodical edited by the Reverend Thomas Charles, of Bala, and reprinted in full by Judge Johnes in his essay on the Causes of Dissent in Wales,² who added that he had the highest authority for asserting the accuracy of the account which reads as follows: “In those days,” says the narrator, “the land was dark indeed! Hardly any of the lower ranks could read at all. The morals of the Country were very corrupt, and in this respect there was no difference between gentle and simple, layman and clergyman. Gluttony, drunkenness and licentiousness prevailed throughout the whole country. Nor were the operations of the Church at all calculated to repress these evils. From the pulpit the name of the Redeemer was hardly ever heard, nor was much mention made of the natural sinfulness of man, nor of the influence of the spirit."

"On Sunday mornings the poor were more constant in their attendance at Church than the gentry, but the Sunday evenings were spent by all in idle amusements. Every Sabbath there was what was called a 'chwareu-gamp' a sort of sport in which all the young men of the neighbourhood had a trial of strength, and the people assembled from the surrounding country to see their feats. On Saturday night, particularly in the summer, the young men and maids held what they called 'Singing eves' (nosweithiau canu) that is they met together and diverted themselves by singing in turns to the harp till the dawn of the Sabbath. In this town (Bala) they used to employ the Sundays in dancing and singing to the harp and in playing tennis against the town hall. In every corner of the town some sport or other went on till the light of the Sabbath day had faded away. In the summer 'Interludes' (a kind of rustic drama) were performed,¹ gentlemen and peasants sharing the diversion together. A set of vagabonds called the 'Bobl Gerdded' (walking people) used to traverse the Country, begging with impunity, to the disgrace of the law of the land." The learned judge then proceeds to moralise on the seeming improbability that a people so gay and thoughtless as the Welsh of that period, to use his description, would become converts to Methodism, or that the joyous group, to use his words again, which assembled at Bala on Sunday evening, would become a leading congregation of modern Puritans.

This passage is quoted at length, with the set purpose of giving fair expression of the views as held by the early revivalists. It will be readily admitted that excessive drinking of beer and spirits was an unhappy trait of the century, and the historian of the eighteenth century has portrayed the despair with which the evil was regarded by the more earnest section of the people. It will be admitted also that the morals of the country have improved since the period in question, and that facilities for education have greatly increased, but it may be pleaded that the economic and scientific progress, and also the advances in domestic comforts since the period in question, are such as should make a fair-minded student averse to criticising unduly the lives of those who lived under less fortunate conditions.

Granting that some measure of censure is the due of the Church for not speeding religious and social improvements, and that it paid the penalty of this neglect, it yet becomes increasingly difficult to agree with the pessimistic view of the Reverend Thomas Charles, as he gives, there can be little doubt, a distorted view of the life of his countrymen in the eighteenth century. In some respects the description is even pleasing and leaves the impression that reform rather than destruction of such a life would have been preferable.

Substantial as were the gains in several directions from the rise and growth into power of the Welsh religious movement of the latter end of the eighteenth century, a modern student cannot but ponder over the counter-balancing losses, among which may be reckoned the fact that the new movement largely destroyed among the Welsh people the feeling of the joyousness of life, one of the most gracious gifts of God.¹

It is outside the scope of this Introduction to dwell on this aspect of the traditional life of the people with which the revivalists came into conflict, emphasis being laid upon it with a view rather to remind the reader of the antagonism of spirit that at once arose between the older and the newer forces. The historians of Welsh Nonconformity have pictured with moving sympathy the hostile reception which frequently faced their leaders in the early days of the movement, but it would seem that men, however earnest, whose energies were in part directed in a narrow spirit against the age-long customs of a lively people, could hardly expect to escape the inevitable unpopularity following such a course.

No branch of the Church can claim immunity from the rule that institutions governed by human men are liable to corruption, but censure may be directed against the refusal to recognize the corruption and to welcome the efforts of earnest men for reform. The revival came largely from the bosom of the old Church, but churchpeople, including bishops, clergy, and influential laymen, lacked the foresight or the will to guide into orthodox channels the rising tide of religious earnestness.

The psychological movement was propitious. The system of the Church presupposes a certain amount of ¹Even in recent years a writer, in describing the lives of several of the Revival preachers, tells with approval of their protests against the games and dances of the people. Reference may also be made to the charge that the Revivalists and their successors were numbered amongst those who largely opposed the efforts to revive the holding of Eisteddfodau.

moral and intellectual culture, while the spirit which underlay the revival was a natural stage for a people to pass through when, after much neglect, the religious sense has been vehemently stirred.

The revivalists preached a living gospel, with the Welsh language becoming in their hands a great evangelising force. Against such an instrument, wielded with power and eloquence, the Church, hampered by worn-out traditions and abuses of organisation, was helpless.

During the latter decades of the eighteenth century, judging by tradition handed down as to the life led by many of the clergy,¹ by their non-residence and by the prevalence of pluralism, the Church was probably at the lowest ebb of its spiritual capacity, and, as bearing on this, it may be noted that the list of ordinations for the last decade of the century show a smaller number of deacons ordained than in any other decade throughout the eighteenth or the nineteenth centuries.

Reference may here be made to the contention that the poverty of the benefices in Wales was largely accountable for the presence of pluralism, and that much of the trouble which faced the Church was due to poverty.² There may be some measure of truth in this contention, though the records of the Diocese of Bangor show that pluralism was due rather to the financial ambitions of the clergy, who held together the more valuable benefices rather than those of small value, and it should also be remembered that modern Nonconformity in Wales won its position without any financial endowment and in spite of its poverty; it might even be argued, from some points of view, that its growth was partly due to its poverty.

¹*The Ancient British Church* (Pryce), p. 264, where the following passage appears: "Many of the Welsh clergy sank to the secular level of the country squires of those days, whose drinking excesses they excused and not rarely countenanced by actual participation."

²This contention is put forward by an able historical writer, the late Archdeacon Bevan, in Diocesan Histories (St. David's) (S.P.C.K.) and in other publications.

At the same time the drift away from the Church in the diocese was slow, though steady, a fact in itself indicative of the stubborn adherence of the mass of the people to the Church.

The return of Bishop Zackary Pearce of the year 1749 has been dealt with, and though frequent references are made therein to the itinerant preachers, nearly half a century passed before the movement away began to assume marked proportions in the diocese.

Among the Records of the Consistory Court, as already referred to, are entries of the certificates granted for the performance of services by Nonconformists in buildings under the Toleration Act.¹ These entries cannot be considered as complete,² but in the absence of other information they furnish some evidence that the establishment of such licensed buildings in the Diocese of Bangor was not pronounced until the last decade of the eighteenth century. In the year 1811, the Calvinistic Methodists formally separated and then, in the course of a half century, the passing over from the Church of the majority of the Welsh-speaking people was, to a large extent, complete. In many ways this slow growth was not surprising, as in nothing is a pastoral and agricultural people, such as the diocese mainly comprised, more conservative than in its religious practices and principles, and yet this slow, but steady, growth probably made the movement in the long run the more permanent.

¹These have been published in the Transactions of the Anglesey Antiquarian Society and Field Club (1922 and 1924), under the heading of "Sidelights on the Rise of Nonconformity in the Diocese of Bangor."

If the argument is sound that the growth of Nonconformists in the diocese was slow until the end of the century, the question will arise as to what steps were taken to strengthen the position of the Church by removing the causes that contributed to the defection of the people. It does not appear that, with the exception of the provision already made for encouraging the erection of parsonage houses or of the gradual attempts by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty to increase the income of the poorer benefices, any active measures were set on foot, or even that the full nature of the peril was realised.

It is true that in the early years of the nineteenth century a group of clergy, some of them men of marked ability, established at Bangor a society for the issue of tracts. This little society has been described in a brochure,¹ entitled Minutes and Proceedings of an Old Tract Society of Bangor Diocese, 1804-1812, its purpose being to publish small tracts on religious subjects in the Welsh language. This society, which accomplished much useful work for a few years, was fortunate in its helpers. Among such were John Jones, Archdeacon of Merioneth, Bampton Lecturer at Oxford in the year 1821; Rowland Williams, a Welsh scholar and divine, who ultimately became Rector of Ysceifiog and Canon of St. Asaph Cathedral, the latter being, for some time, the secretary. Nicholas Owen, Thomas Ellis Owen, and Peter Williams, already mentioned, and several others, were also workers for the society.

At the same time a close study of the brief biographies of the members, as given in the brochure in question, discloses a condition of pluralism and non-residence which is startling, and seems to suggest that few realised the gravity of the position.¹

Except that a new and larger church was built at Amlwch to replace the ancient church, and to serve the increase of population, the expense, as is recorded, being borne by the copper mining company, and that the Church of St. Ann was built by the owner of the Penrhyn Quarry to meet the needs of the growing population engaged in the slate industry, there is little evidence of any effort to adapt the machinery of the Church to the shifting of population to the slate quarry and mining districts that had already begun. It is true that the Topographical Dictionary of Wales, by Lewis, published in the year 1840, records many instances during the years previous to such publication of the restoration and rebuilding of churches, while efforts which have not received their due recognition were made by the clergy to provide school buildings for the furtherance of education for the children of the poor, but it was not until the third and fourth decades of the nineteenth century that decisive measures were taken to steer the Church out of the backwater. Following on the great movement for political reform, culminating in the first Reform Act, several important statutes were passed by Parliament, which helped to save the Church from what, in the Welsh-speaking districts, might have been complete collapse.

¹It may be noted that Archdeacon John Jones and the Reverend Rowland Williams are not amongst the pluralists.

For instance, an Act¹ was passed which abolished payment of tithe in kind, and substituted therefor a tithe rent charge apportioned on a fixed basis on the various lands, a reform, the value of which, at this distance of time, it is difficult to realise sufficiently.

More particularly, the Pluralities Act (1 & 2 Vict., c. 106), an Act of the greatest importance, put an end finally to pluralism, a system that had proved a curse to the Church, not least in the Diocese of Bangor, since the middle ages ; it provided, moreover, comparatively easy methods of dividing or re-arranging parishes, or of forming new parishes, and it contained generally provisions of great value. The statutes that established the Church Commission, afterwards known as the Ecclesiastical Commission, with extensive powers of dealing with excessive revenues of Sees and Cathedrals, proved of immense value, and, during the remainder of the century, munificent grants were continually made by the Commissioners to assist the development of work in the diocese. Furthermore, the Commissioners provided from their funds an income for the Dean of the Cathedral and the Archdeacons of the Diocese, and so terminated the unhappy system whereby benefices were annexed to those offices. Statutes were also passed for facilitating the building of churches and for dealing with unworthy clergy.

¹The principal Tithe Commutation Act was 6 and 7 Will 4, C. 71 (Tithe Act, 1836).

These, with other enactments, brought relief from the weaknesses and abuses which, in the course of centuries, had overgrown the organisation of the Church and thus made possible the revival in spiritual life during the Victorian age.

The registers themselves tell of the change. Since the earliest list of appointments to benefices in the diocese, dated in the year 1409, became available, not a single new parish appears to have been formed, but from the year 1843 to the end of the century thirteen entirely new parishes are given in the records as receiving incumbents,¹ while numerous other parishes, as the appointments show, were reorganised or separated from each other, several new benefices being thus formed. As illustrating this spirit of reorganisation, it may be mentioned that up to the year 1844, for a long series of years, the bishops of Bangor had always held the parish of Llanddyfnan in Anglesey, with its chapelries, namely, Llanfair M.E., Pentraeth, and Llanbedrgoch, and these names had not appeared in the registers unless in connection with the appointment of an assistant curate. From the year mentioned they were detached from the See, and one incumbent was appointed to Llanddyfnan with Llanfair M.E., and another incumbent to Pentraeth with Llanbedrgoch.

The revival in the Church that these reforms helped to effect was long overdue, and it may be claimed that such revival was in the best interest of Wales. The Non-conformists had by this time become powerful organisations, but they left untouched a considerable section of the people, particularly in the more English-speaking districts.

It seems also that the condition of the population, though it showed improvement as might be expected, was still such as raised despair among thoughtful people. Probably the worst effects of the growth of industrialism left the Welsh-speaking areas unaffected, but the same low standard of life would rule equally in agricultural districts.

In the year 1847, as the result of a Government inquiry, there resulted Blue Books, which described the state of the population as a whole in terms by no means favourable. The volumes raised a storm of just protest, and were styled "Brad y Llyfrau Gleision." It is not necessary to inquire into the correctness or otherwise of the views expressed in the reports. Probably the Commissioners were prejudiced, though it is more difficult to appreciate reasons for charging witnesses with prejudice. The plea may be submitted that in all ages certain temperaments tend to lay stress on the less happy side of life, and that men with such characteristics become pessimists warning people of evil, and they see what they wish to see. This pessimistic note was characteristic of Vicar Prichard, of the Reverend Thomas Charles, as he quotes with approval the narrative above given describing the Bala Sunday, and also of the Blue Books in question. There is little doubt that the latter showed a distorted view, but the same criticism applies, it is claimed, in a certain measure, to the distorted view of Mr. Charles and the revivalists of the eighteenth century. There are those still living who have heard from their elders or have even themselves seen scenes of brutality and debauchery which, to the twentieth century, would appear scarcely credible, but such sights would not justify them in picturing in dark outlines the early or middle years of Victorian Wales.

It is thought that this argument will be recognised as entitled to weight, and emphasis is laid upon it in the hope that those who repudiate the Blue Books will appreciate the need of displaying similar reserve in accepting the wholesale charges of an unworthy life as brought by the revivalists against their countrymen and against the Church in the previous century.

Important as were the reforms in the diocesan machinery, signs of which appear in the records, something more was required for effecting reform in the spiritual life of the Church.

The momentum essential for this purpose was the driving force of individual men. Among such men, who laboured in the diocese up to the middle of the century and even beyond, were James Henry Cotton,¹ associated with the City of Bangor as Vicar, and then as Dean for a period of 52 years (1810-1862). The memory of his work and character as a minister is still held in affection, but his claim to remembrance is based on his efforts as a promoter of elementary education. He travelled over the diocese encouraging the erection of schools, and more particularly pressing on education on its religious side. Thomas Thomas,² who carried through a great work as Vicar of Caernarvon (1835-1859), should also be counted among the foremost promoters of education in his time. He made the Church schools of his parish a model in North Wales, and to him was mainly due the formation of what became the North Wales Training College for Church school masters at Caernarvon. But the real impetus in the revived life of the Church was given by another group of able men, graduates of Oxford, and inspired by the best side of the Oxford Movement. The following may be mentioned as being, in the main, their leaders, taken in order according to the date of their ordination: Morris Williams, better known as Nicander, a Welsh poet and scholar,¹ who died, Rector of Llanrhyddlad, in the year 1874. Evan Lewis, eventually Dean of Bangor, who, in his early days, accomplished a striking work in developing what was then considered the Catholic idea of the Church among the quarrymen of the Ogwen Valley.² Philip Constable Ellis, for 30 years Rector of Llanfairfechan, a fine type of an earnest, though stern, parish priest. William Hughes, Rector of Llanllyfni, afterwards of Llanenddwyn and ultimately of Llanfechell, an able Welsh preacher, who, preaching with a hwyl, taught the highest sacramental doctrine to his people. John Pryce,³ successively Vicar, Archdeacon, and Dean of Bangor, a man of scholarly attainments and learned in the history and theology of the Church, who brought to the group the needful note of culture. Henry Thomas Edwards, successively Vicar of Caernarvon and Dean of Bangor, an ardent patriot and a vigorous controversialist, whether on the platform or in the newspaper press. And lastly, though not an alumnus of Oxford, yet the friend and associate of many of the above, Thomas Davies, Rector of Trawsfynydd and latterly of Llanwrin, a zealous parish clergyman who died early in middle life.

It is not claimed that, individually, any of those named were exceptionally great men, but collectively they formed a remarkable group, each supplying in a wonderful degree the qualities in which the others were deficient. They were racy of the soil, and they understood their countrymen, and they brought in that driving force which, on its highest side, was essential for rescuing the Church from the backwaters into which it had drifted.¹

The attention of the reader has already been drawn to the predominance of ordinands with degrees mainly of the University of Oxford, though occasionally of the University of Cambridge, but in the latter part of the nineteenth century this feature gradually ceased to be characteristic of the diocese.

The change becomes marked about the year 1862, as will be observed in the Ordination Lists, and though ¹Among the beneficed clergy were John Williams ap Ithel (Rector of Llanenddwyn, p. 76), previously Rector of Llanymawddwy, a pioneer among those who revived the study of Welsh history and literature; Thomas Briscoe, Vicar of Holyhead (pp. 74, 83), a Hebrew Scholar; Silvan Evans, Rector of Llanwrin (pp. 83, 88), the Welsh lexicographer and scholar; John Williams (Glanmor), author of Ancient and Modern Denbigh (p. 86). There may also be mentioned Isaac Jones, stipendiary Curate of Llanidan, a scholar of mark (see Transactions of Anglesey Antiquarian Society, 1921, p. 91), and David Howell, hymnologist and orator, for a few years Vicar of Llannor and Denio (p. 77), at a later date Dean of St. Davids.

names still appear of those who were graduates of the older universities, the ordinands, in an increasing degree, came, during a considerable period, from recently-founded theological colleges, such as St. Bees (Cumberland), Queen College (Birmingham), and St. Aidans College (Birkenhead). To the first named, St. Bees, was credited a striking proportion of such recruits for the ministry in the diocese, and as illustrating this, reference may be made to the list of ordinations in the year 1872, when, at the Trinity Ordination, all the five deacons claimed St. Bees as their Alma Mater.

It is outside the scope of this Introduction to describe the great work carried through in the diocese in the erection of new churches, the restoration of old churches, and the building of Church schools during the generation, ending practically with the year 1870, but there can be little doubt that, as a result of such work, coupled with the growing population, the demand for a substantial increase in the number of clergy became urgent.

The theological colleges in question provided the opportunity of attaining a moderate standard of education on an economical basis, and in view of the urgency of the demand for clergy the services rendered by such institutes as clerical training colleges deserve recognition.

The supply of ordinands from such theological colleges was, however, temporary, and it is interesting to note from the lists that before the close of the century it had almost ceased.

New sources arose, which provided the diocese with clergy admirably suited as a whole for the work demanded of them.

Following on the revival in the local grammar schools, made possible by legislation which facilitated their reorganisation, a young and vigorous headmaster¹ was appointed to Friars School, Bangor, in the year 1872. His success as a headmaster was remarkable, and notice is drawn here to his work for the reason that many of his pupils, after graduating at Oxford, entered the ministry of the Church, more particularly in this diocese.

The foundation of the North Wales Training College for elementary schoolmasters at Caernarvon has been mentioned, and reference is made to it, inasmuch as a considerable percentage of its best students ultimately took Holy Orders. Such students as a rule passed on to other colleges or universities, at which degrees were taken by them prior to ordination, and this educational advantage, coupled with the experience gained at the training college and as practising teachers, resulted in their forming a most valuable addition to the ministry in the diocese.

More important, however, in its effects on the whole Church in Wales was the foundation of St. David's College, Lampeter, in the year 1826, though the influence of the college was slow in permeating the Diocese of Bangor. A student of the college first appears in the Ordination Lists in the year 1843,² but it was not until the last quarter of the century that the number of its members in the diocese became marked, though in the last decade they predominate over students of other colleges. It is not clear to what extent they were graduates of the college, for the information in the lists is lacking in detail, but there can be no doubt that, towards the end of the century, the diocese received from St. David's College a body of men, a large number of whom were admirably suited for the work which the times required.

¹Daniel Lewis Lloyd, who ultimately became Bishop of Bangor.

²In the year 1831 two Lampeter students had been ordained on behalf of the Bishop of St. David's.

Reference has already been made to the names of representatives of the leading Welsh families of the district who appear on the roll of the clergy of the diocese in the early part of the seventeenth century. For reasons not entirely apparent, a breach occurs, to a large extent, in this interesting feature after the Civil War period. Doubtless, during the eighteenth century, the opening of wider careers for the younger sons, and also the drift away of such families from their Welsh associations, would account for the change, and possibly these tendencies operated even in the later decades of the seventeenth century.

The less important families, however, contributed, so far as can be traced, considerable numbers to the ministry until the middle of the nineteenth century, while the sons of the clergy, up to the close of the period dealt with, formed a numerous and valuable element in the lists of ordinands.

The district known as the Deanery of Dyffryn Clwyd, embracing Ruthin and the surrounding parishes, had, from early days, formed part of the Diocese of Bangor, while the Deanery of Cyfeiliog, situate mainly along the Valley of the Dovey and its watershed, had been in the Diocese of St. Asaph. An exchange which contributed to efficient working in both dioceses was made in the year 1859, when the Deanery of Dyffryn Clwyd was transferred to St. Asaph, and the Deanery of Cyfeiliog to Bangor. Attention is drawn to this exchange, as it explains the disappearance of the names of certain parishes and the introduction of the names of other parishes in the lists.

The Bishop of Llandaff appears for the first time as presenting to a benefice in the Diocese of Bangor in 1862, this being the result of a rearrangement of patronage made in the year 1861. It arose from the desire of placing at the disposal of the Bishop of Llandaff an increased amount of patronage, wherewith he might promote to the cure of souls a larger proportion of the great number of assistant clergy and others working in the industrial areas of Llandaff Diocese.

The period covered by the lists, whether of appointments or of ordination services, begins in the year 1660, and closes with the year 1899. Those whose names appear in the early years had seen the welter of the Civil Wars, and some, doubtless, were survivors from Laudian days. On them had fallen the duty of reviving the work of the Church after its partial suspension during the Commonwealth regime. Nearly two centuries afterwards in the evolution of time the task of restoring Church life again became urgent, and on the clergy named in the later lists this burden was mainly thrown.

The object of this volume is to assist, by means of the lists given in the following pages, the study of the history of the Church in the Diocese of Bangor amidst the many vicissitudes of its long and chequered career.

Ordination Lists.

Unless otherwise stated, the Ordination Services were held in the Cathedral Church of Bangor.

The following abbreviations additional to those given on page 1 are hereafter used :

Lit. : literate. l.d. : letters dimissory, i.e., letters from another Bishop requesting that a candidate be ordained. ti. : i.e., the preferment, post or place where the newly ordained deacon or priest may exercise his functions. Jes. Coll. : Jesus College, Oxford. S.D.C. : St. David's College, Lampeter. T.C.D. : Trinity College, Dublin.

The later lists give the names of the parishes to which the newly ordained were licensed, and in some cases the stipend assigned to them. These are accordingly entered against their names.

¹Date of Subscription.

The Subscription Book contains a note to the effect that George Gethin, Hugh Robert Hughes, John Evans, Thomas Jones, and William Griffith, the first a candidate for Deacon's Orders and the four following for Priest's Orders, had behaved themselves in a very improper manner after they had made the usual subscription. As a result they were not ordained.

Appendix A.

CLERGY AND INTRUDED MINISTERS IN THE DIOCESE OF BANGOR DURING THE COMMONWEALTH, AND APPOINTMENTS MADE DURING THE YEARS IMMEDIATELY FOLLOWING.

The manuscript sources of information were as follows :—

LAMBETH MS. 902, being an inquisition of Anglesey parishes taken in the year 1650.
 LAMBETH AUGMENTATION BOOKS, giving more particularly the ministers and others sanctioned for work in Wales by the Triers.
 RAWLINSON MS. C.261, at the Bodleian Library.
 THE LORDS JOURNALS, including House of Lords MSS. Commission, 7th Report (Appendix).
 PUBLIC RECORD OFFICE documents, including Returns of Benefices (E.339).

The printed books consulted were, inter alia :—

Sufferings of the Clergy, by Walker.
History of the English Church during the Civil War and Commonwealth, by W. A. Shaw.
Mona Antiqua Restaurata, by Rowlands.
The Puritan Movement in Wales, by Dr. Thomas Richards. Abbreviation, P.M.W.
Religious Development in Wales, by Dr. Thomas Richards. Abbreviation, R.D.W.
The Survey of the Cathedral Church of Bangor, by Browne Willis. Abbreviation, Browne Willis.
The Diocese of Bangor in the Sixteenth Century, by Pryce.
The History of the Diocese of St. Asaph, by Thomas (enlarged edition).
Landmarks in the History of the Welsh Church (Appendix C), by the Archbishop of Wales.

NOTE.—It may be added that the lists of clergy ejected had been largely compiled prior to the publications of the volumes by Dr. Thomas Richards, but to his books, which are a mine of information for the student, I am in the main indebted for the names of the ministers who replaced the ejected clergy, though these have very largely been checked by me with the original sources of information.

PARISHES WHERE INCUMBENTS WERE NOT EJECTED, OR WHERE INFORMATION IS NOT AVAILABLE.

Parish	Incumbent
Aber	William Vaughan ¹ died in 1653	William Hughes ap- pointed 1661
Aberdaron	No information as to the Vicar, but the sinecure Rector, Dr. William Beale, was ejected. On his death William Bodwrda succeeded him in 1651
Bangor	The position is obscure. John Draycot was appointed Vicar in 1660, but this may have been in succession to Thomas Meredith, appointed Rector of Llanddeiniolen. Owen Evans was appointed to the other portion of the Vicarage in February, 1660/61, but the cause of vacancy is not given
Edern	Ric Glynne (?)
Llanaelhaiarn	William Williams ⁴	A Rector appointed in 1660, but cause of vacancy not given
Llanfairfechan	William Vaughan (see Aber)	Griffith Piers, 1653 Griffith Piers, 1661
Llangybi	John Gething (see Criccieth)
Llaniestyn	Cadwaladr Kyffin ⁴	John Jones, 1662
Llanllechid	Richard Jeffries ²
Llanrug	John Cadwaladr ³
Llanystumdwy	Morris Owen	Henry Pugh ⁵ on vac- ancy caused by death of last incumbent
Meillteyrne	Thomas Jones	Henry Maurice, 1661 (see Criccieth and Llannor)
Penmorfa	John Ellis ³

¹The death is given in the Parish Register of Llanfairfechan.

²Died 1664 (Browne Willis, p. 174).

³For date of appointment, vide The Diocese of Bangor in the Sixteenth Century.

⁴P.R.O.

⁵Nominated by Lords Commissioners in the year 1647 (Shaw). See also a Petition by him to the Speaker of the House of Lords, where he states that he holds a presentation from his Lordship to the Rectory, but is most rudely debarred by a prevailing gentleman and his servants in the parish. An annexed affidavit states that William Lloyd was the gentleman in question (Historical MSS. Commission, 6th Report, Appendix, p. 201). See also P.M.W., where he is identified with the Henry Pugh appointed to Abergele.

COUNTIES OF MERIONETH AND MONTGOMERY.

PARISHES WHERE INCUMBENTS WERE EJECTED.

Llandinam	David Roberts	John Osborne, 1658
Llanfachreth	(—) Roberts
Llangurig	Thomas Clarke ⁷	David Roberts, 1654
Llanwnog	Alexander Griffith ³	Humphrey Lewis, 1654	William Bayley, 1661
Pennal	John Swayne ⁶
Penstrowed	William Bayley ⁴	John Evans ⁵ , 1656	John Bayley, 1662 (April)
Towyn	John Hughes	John Swayne, 1658	John Hughes, 1662 (August 20th)

¹He was allowed to retain the chapelry of Maentwrog.

²Was ejected also from Llanllyfni.

³A vehement opponent of the Commonwealth and of the Propagators. Author of Hue and Cry, etc. Was ejected also from Glasbury. The Rectory seems to have been in sequestration from 1649 to 1654, when it was enjoyed by Dr. Dormer and Mr. Gisborne (P.R.O. Returns of Benefices, E.339). The same pair enjoyed the Rectory of Llangurig. A. Griffith was Vicar of Llanwnog, and T. Clark of Llangurig, until ejected.

⁴He is included among those who petitioned to be restored (vide House of Lords MSS. Commission, 7th Report, Appendix).

⁵John Evans was instituted to Llanmerewig in 1660 (History of the Diocese of St. Asaph); also Pat. Rolls and R.D.W., p. 442.

⁶Seems to have been Curate-in-charge, but see under Towyn (LAMBETH AUGMENTATION BOOKS). As Pennal was a chapelry under Towyn, the John Swayne was probably the same man who was appointed to Towyn.

⁷Appointed, apparently, in 1649; ejected in 1650. Thomas Hardinge was connected with Llangurig as Vicar in 1651; Vacant in 1656-1657 (Returns of Benefices, P.R.O.).

¹A pluralist ejected from Towyn (vide supra). The position seems obscure. The certificate in the P.R.O. records a John Hughes, S.T.B., as appointed in 1663 to Llanaber vacant by the death of the last Rector, in which case he could not have been the John Hughes, Rector of Darowen (vide R.D.W., p. 270).

The Visitation Returns for the year 1749 contain a query and the reply as to the number of families in each parish. In most cases an estimate is given, though for several parishes, such as Bangor, Dolgelley, and Ruthin, there are no available figures.

The suggestion is made that by multiplying the number of families by five, the number of the population can approximately be arrived at.

Appendix C.

The following pages contain names of clergy of a period prior for the most part to that covered by this volume, but those interested in the subject may welcome the information as a guide to further research.

The names have appeared elsewhere in print, but are scattered throughout various books, mainly the Calendars of Patent Rolls and Papal Registers (Letters and Petitions). The entries generally appear in the form of Presentations to a benefice or Ratifications of the estate of the presentee in a benefice, but the warning may be given that in the case of the Presentations there is no certainty of the presentee having been placed in office¹. The appointment or the name can, however, be checked occasionally in charters or poems, or by reference to the cause of the succeeding vacancy, if so given.

The names of clergy fined for participation in the wars of Owen Glyndwr are taken from a history of Anglesey, published in the year 1775. Incumbents in the year 1535 are given in the Valor Ecclesiasticus, and for a later period the Certificates in the Public Record Office are available. These latter names, so far as they do not appear in the diocesan records, are given in the following pages.

Those desirous of compiling lists of incumbents, in addition to examining the sources above mentioned, should inspect the Register of Bishop Benedict of Bangor (1408-1417), published in the Archæologia Cambrensis (1922), also Mona Antiqua Restaurata, Browne Willis's Survey of the Cathedral Church of Bangor, and The Diocese of Bangor in the Sixteenth Century (Pryce).
